Administrative History

The M. E. Grenander Department of Special Collections and Archives originates in the early 1971 with the establishment of the University Archives. The department was needed to manage the growing volume of public records created by the university after it had evolved into a major research university the previous decade.

In 1976 the department's first major outside collecting area was established with the transfer of the German and Jewish Intellectual Émigré Collections from the New School with the help of Professor John M. Spalek. In 1982 the department started collecting materials on New York State politics and public policy, which became its largest area of focus. In 1996 the department was dedicated to former Professor of English, M.E. Grenander. In 1999 the department moved to the specially-designed 3rd floor of the Science Library, and also began a joint effort with the Department of Criminal Justice to establish the National Death Penalty Archive.

The principal purpose of the department is to collect, preserve, provide access to, exhibit, and encourage research use of the University Libraries' unique manuscript and archival materials, the official records of the University, rare books, and printed materials.

COVID-19 Updates, 2020-03-14-2020-04-22

Processing Information:

Processing Information

Videos from this file were embeded on the university's COVID-19 up date page at <http://www.albany.edu/COVID-19>. This page was only partially captured in the university web archives, as a staff leave from March-April 2020 and data caps unfortunately limited web crawling and YouTube videos we're often excluded from crawls. Thus, these videos were downloaded in later months to fill these gaps.

Scope and Contents

Includes updates sent by the university administration during the early stages of the COVID-19 pandemic. The videos we're embeded on the university website and the two weekly situation reports were broadly disseminated. Other weekly situation reports existed but were not broadly shared by university administration.
