THE STUDENT COUNCIL DANCE

Pessimism is in the air: Despite the delightful spring weather, there is fallen on the school an impenetrable and practically optimism-proof mantle of deep and dark foreboding. Students greet each other softly and sorrowfully as though in the presence of death. Perhaps they are, since these flown-cast students believe that the Student Council Dance is doomed to an ignominious failure.

Not admitting that any couse for apprehension does exist, we fail to understand why that much-discussed dance should not be a success. There is too much at stake, in the first place, to even think of letting it be unsuccessful. Plans are so far advanced that there is no room for the prediction of failure but only for workers to prevent its being a failure.

Very recently each Senior High School home room voted to assess itself three tickets. Surely that's proof enough for the most skeptical that when Good Fortune seemingly deserts them, the Milne students can join together and make their own a success. It is inevitable, now, that the dance be success, for the Milne students have only to hear one whisper of proposed failure to make them join whole-heartedly in disproving the pessimists.

SPRING SOLILOQUY

We were wandering along the sidewalk of an exquisite Albany thoroughfare the other afternoon---the sun was deliciously warm and what the poets call "the balmy breezes of Spring" were gently stirring the golden-green foliage of the trees --- when, after contemplating the beauties of nature, those of Spring especially, we decided that money-mad America didn't appreciate the spring-time miracles of the developing leaves and flowers, or the perennial delights of secluded communion with nature, and while we were strolling along it suddenly occurred to us that there are other phases to Spring besides sun-kist lanes at twilight.

We remembered that it was only a couple of weeks ago when our new gray suit was ruined in a surprise April shower; and we also remembered that it was after the 21st of March that our best girl caught a bad cold, ane of those lion-like March days, and couldn't attend that very important formal dance with us.

And so we meditated a while longer, and decided that, though we couldn't blame money-mad America, we guessed we'd take the bitter with the sweet and like Spring best of all the seasons, anyway.

 HUMOR ****

Rita: Ou-ou! I want that string of pearls in the window.

Bob: Well, they are in the window-----everybody happy?

Husband: Jane, this meat sastes very queer.

Wife: That's funny. I burnt it, but I immediately applied unguentine.

Mother: Well, Tommy, do you think your Algebra teacher likes you?

Tommy: I think so, because she marks so many x's on all my algebra papers:

COME OUT FOR THAT DANCE!!!
