Dear Otto,

I am not rude by temperament, but I have long since lost the capacity to keep up with correspondnece, and sometimes that leads to rudeness, particularly when I fail to acknowledge a book, which I rate as a higher offence. What finally forced even my hand was the fact that tonight I am going to hear a paper by a Professor Cressey, whom you probably know, on White Collar Crime, and the very idea takes me back years to a very pleasant period.

Yes I recived 'that damned book' as you call it, and I will not lie and say I have read it, but I have read in it, and I don't look for proofreader's errors. What I saw looked very good, and I am really very grateful. More than that I will not say now.

I agree it ought not be another decade till we meet again. When are you coming east again? And how are you enjoying professing at Columbia?

Regards &c,

Yours,

Wu
