Dear Jonas:

When I thanked you for your reprint on "Immortality" some weeks ago, I had merely glanced at it. Only now I read it with due attention. I am deeply impressed by your honest and successful effort to establish the meaningfulness of the idea of immortality in the present world. To be frank, I am somewhat intrigued by your suggestion that, in a sense, man holds the fate of deity in his hands. At any rate, I find it much easier to think of God's divesting himself of his deity within a trinitarian system.

Many thanks once more and best wishes for the summer to all of you from both of us.

Sincerely yours,
