Court's injunction against ASUBA continues

Mandell.

A Student Association (SA) Supreme Court hearing came to an abrupt halt late Friday after the court announced it will not remove the injunction it had placed on the Albany State University Black Alliance (ASUBA) last Tuesday.

The decision was made after ASUBA President Kahina Van Dyke stormed out of CC375, where the court was about to hear her petition charging SA President Bill Weitz and Central Council with "interference of the branches in the affairs of (ASUBA)...."

Van Dyke had made a brief opening statement before she left, announcing she was withdrawing her petition, having made "mutually beneficial arrangements" following a "series of negotiations" with other black leaders on campus.

Van Dyke had requested the court file a temporary injunction to block an attempt by an opposing faction within ASUBA to remove her as president and elect a new president at a mass meeting that was scheduled for last Wednesday. That meeting was cancelled when the court's injunction froze all ASUBA activities. Van Dyke filed a petition against Weitz and Central Council for their roles in supporting her ouster, which resulted from the invalidation of the Spring '91 ASUBA elections.

Weitz was unavailable for comment Monday evening.

"We need autonomy now," Van Dyke said in her statement. This declaration followed complaints by Van Dyke and others, who have publicly complained ASUBA's internal problems should not have been brought into public forums such as Central Council and the ASP.

Van Dyke Monday afternoon said this was the reason she withdrew her petition. "It was a move to let the black leadership decide its own fate.... We realized we had to put our personal feelings aside."

Van Dyke confirmed she and Derek Westbrook, the former ASUBA president, who Weitz named interim president until a new president could be elected, have both tentatively agreed to remove themselves from the executive board to diffuse the situation "and allow ASUBA to start working out their problems themselves."

ASUBA has rescheduled its mass meeting for Wednesday night at 7:30 pm to decide on the new executive board.

After Van Dyke withdrew her petition Friday, Chief Justice Josh Mandell began to question why she was withdrawing her petition then, saying he was not satisfied questions about the ASUBA matter had been answered. "This court has never been, or never will be, a vehicle for people to make public statements," Mandell said.

Van Dyke Monday afternoon, upon learning the court had scheduled another hearing about ASUBA, was critical of the court. "They are continuing to interfere in (our) affairs," she said.

"This is the body Kahina Van Dyke chose on her own volition to bring her case to and bring the matter before...the

University Senate debates state budget's impact on SUNYA

By Ellen Kackman
STAFF WRITER

University President H. Patrick Swygert last Monday appeared at a University Senate meeting to talk about the impact the worsening state budget situation will have on the campus. Swygert also reported on several administrative issues.

Senate Chair Edward Turner opened the Senate meeting and quickly turned the floor over to Swygert. Swygert began by alerting Senate members of the search being conducted by Dean Francine Frank, for a new Dean of Education, as well as the position of Director of the Office of Research. Also, once December arrives, John Hartigan will retire from his post of Vice President of Finance, Swygert said, and a search for his replacement will be necessary.

Next on Swygert's agenda was a response to a recent Middle States' evaluation of SUNYA. Middle States, an educational advisory organization, has suggested SUNYA should revise its mission statement, which defines the University's priorities and goals. A committee will be formed to review the current statement being used by Albany.

"In my opinion, the mission statement should tell a great deal about what we are and where we are going," Swygert said.

Swygert also said he has confidence the committee will take its task seriously. SUNYA's mission statement was last published in 1982.

"We hope to encourage faculty to speak out on what should be included in the statement," said Swygert, of the revising and updating of the document. "It is a rare opportunity that a University gets the chance to look at its statement."

Swygert then discussed the state budget's impact on the University. He said a number of faculty members have approached him with concern about recent newspaper headlines reporting the large impending state deficit. "We're talking about a deficit of at least $600 million," Swygert said.

President Swygert said the University has made a "loose guideline" of those expenses are necessary to run the University, so it can operate under the restraints and probable cutbacks the state deficit may create for SUNYA. The University has been able to maintain discipline, despite the cutbacks so far, Swygert said, adding he expects the University to pull through this budget crisis with "its feet on the ground." "We are as prepared as can be," he said.

Swygert predicted a reduction in the operating budgets of the 64 SUNY campuses, meaning less money being channeled into Albany. An option Swygert has repeatedly suggested as a viable solution to the budget crunch is a "mission based" tuition increase to be instituted at SUNYA. A small part of this increase would remain at SUNYA, with the rest going into the State's general fund. The money left behind at SUNYA would go for "campus-based priorities," Swygert said.

Swygert said the University is seeking ways to cut spending, but maintain the quality of services at the same time. In spite of the difficulties, there are still 26 new members of faculty at the University, Swygert said. He added there has been no reduction of faculty, teacher's assistants, graduate assistants, or security staff on campus. "So far, we are ahead of our campus financial prediction," Swygert said.

What is the SUNY University Senate?

Compiled from information from "Your Senate," a University publication

The University Senate consists of 9 committees. One has a specific set of duties and responsibilities. The nine committees are:

The Council of Promotions and Continuing Appointments (CPCA), advises the President on the continued employment and status of its faculty members.

The Educational Policy Council (EPC) helps develop the campus budget, reviews proposals for new programs, and reviews the proposed academic plan for the school year.

The Graduate Academic Council (GAC), which makes sure that the plans approved by the EPC, are carried out on the graduate level. The GAC also reviews graduate programs and decides what standards for admission will be to various graduate programs.

The Undergraduate Academic Council (UAC) performs the same duties as the GAC, but on the undergraduate level.

Council on Research (RES), decides how funds for research will be divided up, and oversees the progress made in research activities.

Council on Libraries, Information Systems and Computing (LISC), reviews all proposed plans concerning libraries and all other information facilities on campus.

Council of Academic Freedom and Ethics (CAFE), which reviews and decides upon policies which pertain to academic freedom and ethics in the University community, and deals with making decisions pertaining to these issues should they arise.

The Student Affairs Council (SAC): deals with student life outside of academics.

University Community Council (UCC): handles the overseeing of University programs which are non-academic, such as parking, alumni, transportation, and living on campus.

HOW IS A BILL PASSED:

Recommendations made by various committees of the Senate are submitted to the Executive Committee of the Senate. The Committee consists of the chairs of the nine committees, officers of the Senate, the past Chair-person of the Senate, the President of the University, the president of the Student Association, and representatives from the SUNY-wide Senate.

After a recommendation has been brought to the Executive Committee and considered, it is then returned to the floor of the Senate for debate, where it is passed, defeated, or given back to the Council which originally recommended it. Bills which are passed by the Senate are then forwarded to the University President as recommendations.

Lenin to be moved?

Moscow, U.S.S.R

(AP) Removal of Vladimir Lenin's body from its mausoleum on Red Square would be a tragedy, the commander of the guards protecting the remains said in an interview published Thursday.

Vladimir Kamennykh, in charge of security at the red granite landmark, told the newspaper Pravda it would be a wrong to remove Lenin's remains and rebury them in St. Petersburg.

"That would be a mistake, a tragic mistake," he said.

On the last day of a parliamentary session following the August coup attempt, radical St. Petersburg Mayor Anatoly Sobchak proposed removing the body from the mausoleum for burial in his city—formerly Leningrad.

The mausoleum draws millions of Soviet and foreign tourists annually.

Funerals go hi-tech

Osaka, Japan

(AP) Sentimental synthesizer music from loudspeakers drowns out the sniffles of the bereaved as a motorized coffin glides slowly across a long hall under a laser spotlight.

Seated before the coffin is a Buddhist priest in ceremonial dark robes, his hands clasped in prayer. A procession of family members follows as mist from dry ice billows all around. Green and orange lights shine eerily from the ceiling.

Theatrical rites such as those at the Gyokusenin, a bowling alley turned funeral parlor, are replacing centuries-old Japanese funerals, steeped in ancestor worship and organized by the community.

The five-minute service, culminating in a cremation, tacks an extra $300 onto the basic funeral, which includes flowers, meals for the guests and temple fees.

"We began this service because people traditionally used to walk and accompany the coffin to the graveyard. Our service just takes less time," Tomikawa said.

Marine dies of AIDS

Boston

(AP) An AIDS-infected Marine who won $3.8 million in a negligence suit for the AIDS death of his wife and son died early Friday, his attorney said.

Martin Gaffney died at 3:10 a.m. at Massachusetts General Hospital, where he had been hospitalized since September, said his attorney, Jackie McKenney.

Gaffney, 42, had charged in his suit that doctors at the Long Beach, Calif., Naval Hospital botched his wife's pregnancy in 1981 by failing to give her a Cæsarean section. She was two weeks late delivering the baby, and required a blood transfusion that was tainted with the AIDS virus.

The infant was stillborn. The couple had another son, who died of AIDS at 13 months. Gaffney's wife, Mutsuko, died of AIDS in 1987. His 8-year-old daughter, Maureen, now lives with Gaffney's brother in Lowell.

Gaffney, who also tested positive for HIV, was diagnosed with lymphoma, form of cancer that sometimes occurs as a result of the AIDS infection. Maureen has tested negative for HIV, the virus that causes AIDS.

In April, U.S. District Court Judge Rya W. Zobel awarded Gaffney $3.5 million, plus $315,000 to cover future medical costs. The decision was finalized in June.

"To represent Marty was an honor," McKenney said Friday. "He was a person of absolutely rock solid values. The way he approached his battle with the government was the way he approached his battle with cancer—with unbelievable courage and dignity."

Will wildlife prevail?

Washington, D.C.

(AP) The Senate Friday derailed, and possibly killed for this year, a broad-ranging energy bill because of opposition to opening an Arctic wildlife refuge in Alaska to oil drilling.

The legislation's supporters failed to get the 60 votes needed to cut off debate and advance the bill toward a final Senate roll call. The vote was 50-44.

Sen. Bennett Johnston, D-La., who had crafted the bill, expressed doubt it can be resurrected with the Alaska refuge provision. He said he would "try to pull together" another bill.

"We have killed in three days an effort that took over a year to develop," declared Sen. Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska, a supporter of the bill.

"We're leaving town, many of us with the feeling that the energy debate is over for the year. I hope that is not the case," said Sen. David Pryor, D-Ark.

The strongest criticism came from senators opposed to the oil drilling along a 1.5-million acre coastal plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, or ANWR, in northern Alaska. The bill also includes provisions to promote nuclear power and natural gas development.

Runners took NY

New York

(AP) Salvador Garcia, a sergeant in the Mexican army, won the New York marathon, and first-time marathoner Liz McColgan of Scotland finished the women's race in record time.

Garcia ran the 26.2-mile course in 2 hours, 9 minutes, 28 seconds, the sixth-fastest in the race's 22-year history.

McColgan, 27, completed the course in 2 hours, 27 minutes, 23 seconds, shattering the record of 2 hours, 30 minutes, 37 seconds for a first-time marathoner.

"My plan was to win," said McColgan, who is accustomed to running 5,000 and 10,000 meters. "I have enough confidence to beat anyone."

Garcia, 31, the runner-up last year, ran the fastest marathon of his career.

The New York Marathon, with a field of more than 26,000 runners, is the nation's biggest race. The course winds through New York's five boroughs.

The first-place finishes by Garcia and McColgan extended the streak of foreign winners in the New York Marathon. No American has won since Alberto Salazar in 1982 and no American woman has finished first since Miki Gorman in 1977.

Arsonist sentenced

Kingston

(AP) A former state prison guard who beat three murder charges was sentenced yesterday to between five and 15 years in prison for setting an arson fire following the November 1990 slayings.

Ulster County Court Judge Francis Vogt said he gave Michael Laveglia, 31, the maximum sentence because "it was his intent to destroy a crime scene, one of the most serious crimes ever committed in this community."

Laveglia escaped a maximum life sentence when a jury acquitted him of three second-degree murder counts on Nov. 20 in the deaths of Thomas Thompson, 38, his wife Lorraine Thompson, 26, and 45-year-old Joseph Realmuto.

The New York Public Interest Research Group (NYPIRG) has begun distributing a pamphlet, the "Albany County NYPIRG Voter's Guide 1991" to inform students about local candidates' positions on several environmental, consumer, and government-related issues.

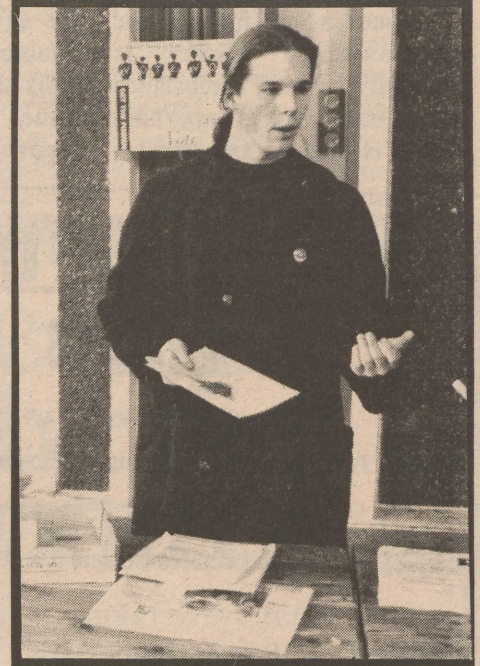

Surveys were sent to 78 candidates in each of the 39 legislative districts, said SUNYA NYPIRG Member Sean Fitzgerald. Races to be decided by voters include the ones for county executive, county legislature seats, and local school board positions.

Five specific questions were posed to each of the candidates participating in the survey. The first question the survey asked was whether the candidates would be in favor of an Albany County law requiring supermarkets to place individual price labels on virtually all items they sell.

The other questions focused on whether Albany County should: construct a regional solid waste incinerator, expand current recycling efforts, pass a law banning all cigarette vending machines, and have political party caucus meetings to be open to the public when government business is being discussed.

The questions asked in the survey are major issues NYPIRG works on, Fitzgerald said.

This year, NYPIRG registered 601 voters. "Basically, there is (usually) a low voter turnout because of registration laws and lack of information," Fitzgerald said. "They (students) have information now to make a real choice in the polls. Thirty seconds of TV commercials don't help."

University of Iowa mourns the loss of five due to weekend shooting spree

By Greg Smith

Iowa City, Iowa

(AP) University of Iowa students and professors came together today to share their grief over the shootings of five colleagues. The school's president told the hushed gathering it was time to "begin the long and difficult process of healing."

Classes were canceled and the University community was invited to the student union to try and sort out emotions raised by the killings Friday by a disgruntled former graduate student. More than 200 staff members and students came.

"We cannot make sense of this," university President Hunter Rawlings told the group. "We are out of our depth. Last Friday, the university was senselessly diminished."

He said the healing process would follow this time of "deep and terrible sadness."

Authorities said that the former student, Gang Lu, was angry because his doctoral dissertation wasn't chosen by a committee for an academic honor.

He took the .38 caliber revolver to a weekly meeting of the physics and astronomy department Friday, where he began a rampage in which he killed five people and himself.

"He stood up and started shooting," said Paul Hansen, a research scientist in the department. "He didn't say anything."

Lu, 28, shot to death two professors and the student whose dissertation last spring was nominated for the award over Lu's. Then he left the meeting room and killed a third professor in his office. Next he went to another building, where he fatally shot an administrator at the 28,000-student university and wounded her secretary.

College scholarships are offered to returning students over the age of 25

(CPS) With America's baby boomers returning to campus in droves, the average age of the college student is rising. Surprisingly, nearly half of all college students are over the age of 25.

Orville Redenbacher's, the popcorn company, has set up a scholarship program called "Second Start" that is designed for adults over the age of 30. The company says it developed the program because many adults, with families to support and no parental assistance, cannot afford to continue their education.

For the third time, the company is offering 20 $1000 scholarships. Applicants have to complete an essay on why they wish to return to school. Last year 14,000 people applied for the program.

"We were blown away by the number," says Gary Redenbacher, grandson of Orville, and a principle in the family company. Redenbacher says he hopes American private industry will "pick up the slack" in financing college education for adults.

"I'm a second-starter," says Redenbacher, who returned to college at the age of 33 after a post-high school stint at a university. "I hope these scholarships make people think 'I am worth something. I can do it.' A lot of folks who apply are down and out. Maybe (the scholarships) will help them discover they are something."

Equinox House offers drug rehab for minorities

By Nancy Gandiello

Equinox, a State-funded clinic in downtown Albany, is currently running a substance abuse recovery group. This group is open to any African American or Hispanic men over the age 18. The services of Equinox are on an out-patient basis and attempt to deal with issues of substance abuse recovery, as well as their relationship to issues such as identity and assimilation and family relationships.

Dawn Lewis and Leonard Tirado are the co-facilitators for the group. According to Tirado, "these minorities [African Americans and Hispanics] are underserved for theory in the Capital Region".

A recent press release stated the group, "will meet the needs of a growing high risk group."

As a state-funded clinic, Equinox asks only a small fee from its participants. The press release stated "the service will not be denied to those who are unable to pay."

Although there are no specific events planned for the coming months, Tirado indicated there are always outreach to community events, they were involved in was an anti-drug March through Arbor Hill.

Equinox has been in existence for approximately 14 years and provides the services of many qualified psychologists and social workers. They are open and available weekly Monday thru Friday and are located at 214 Lark Street.

Minorities to learn about grad school

The Upstate New York Graduate Education Forum for Students of Color, designed to motivate undergraduate students of color to consider graduate school, will be held on Saturday, November 9, in the lecture center concourse.

The keynote speaker will be New York State Assemblyman Arthur Eve. His speech will be delivered at 11 a.m. in LC18.

Other programs scheduled for the day include a presentation on the keys to success and survival in graduate school, a presentation about how to finance a graduate education and several workshops on preparation for graduate exams (GMATs).

Representatives from hundreds of graduate schools across the country will be present. "This is a unique one-day opportunity to hear from various knowledgeable people about going to graduate school. It is also a chance to ask any questions and hear other students' questions answered," said John Barto, interim assistant dean of graduates studies. For more information, contact the University's Office of Graduate Studies at 442-3981.

United Way gets SUNYA's help

By Sean Hogan

With this year's goal at $80,000, the University has launched its United Way campaign hoping to beat last year's total

According to "Update" (the University newsletter), Edward Jennings, an assistant professor in the Department of English, and chair of the campaign, said he hoped to see greater participation on the campus.

"More participation would indicate that the campaign as a whole considers the campaign as not just something that comes once a year, but as something that is important to all of us," he said.

Even with the current economic difficulties, Jennings said he felt it was important for people to remember that there are still many people in our community who are less fortunate. "Whatever we give makes a huge difference to those on the receiving end of our generosity."

The fund raiser is an annual program by the State Employees Federal Appeal (SEFA). Through the SEFA plan, employees can set aside a portion of their earnings to be contributed directly to the United Way of Northeastern New York or to any county in the area.

Some of the organizations that benefit from these contributions include Boy/Girl Scouts, and Special Olympics.

Sheila Mahan, assistant to University President H. Patrick Swygert and the campus coordinator for the United Way campaign, said in order to encourage people to participate, the forms have been made less complicated.

Researcher: AIDS-infected patients kiss and don't tell

(CPS) A survey of HIV-positive men in a clinic showed that almost one-fourth admitted that they continued to engage in sex without revealing their deadly infection to their homosexual lovers.

Gary Marks, an assistant professor of preventative medicine at the University of Southern California, said 138 men were questioned at a public clinic that treats HIV-infected patients.

"You need to protect yourself with everyone," Marks said. "You can't assume others are going to disclose their infection. You have to take responsibility for protecting yourself by using condoms during sex."

Marks did not identify the clinic, revealing only that it was located in a predominantly Hispanic neighborhood, because he is continuing research there.

Homicide: A Thinking Man's Thriller

David Mamet doesn't take too many shots at the big screen. The writer/director, who has put out some of the finest contemporary plays such as American Buffalo, makes his third effort in the film industry with Homicide.

Wayne Stock

Mamet, who has quickly established a cast loyalty similar to Woody Allen, reassembles the regulars from his first two works (House of Games and Things Change) for a penetrating look at modern day police work and anti-Semitism.

Joe Mantegna is lieutenant Robert Gold, a hostage negotiator for the police department, who finds himself involved in two different cases. Gold is reassigned to help bring in a cop killer after the F.B.I. is taken off the case. While conducting the investigation, Gold accidentally arrives at the scene of a murder of an elderly, Jewish woman.

With two officers already on the scene, Gold remains at the crime area until further backup arrives, only to find himself pulled into the investigation. "These are your people," a police captain says to Gold in reference to his Jewish identity. "We want you on the case."

After being shuffled off the cop killer case, Gold slowly enters the world of anti-Semitism and Jewish vigilantes.

The family of the murdered woman believes the act was committed by a local neo-Nazi group, who has been hanging posters calling for the fulfillment of the master plan. Rather than showing concern

Joe Mantegna is pensive as he contemplates his heritage and its history for the family's problem, Gold initially shows only hostility for being taken off the other homicide investigation.

As Gold gets more involved in the underworld actions of the Jewish hate group, he is faced with a confrontation between work and religious loyalty.

In one of the most riveting scenes in the film, Gold enters a hobby store which the Jewish vigilante group believes is the local headquarters of the hate group. As Gold enters the backroom of the store, Mamet gives a dramatic shot of him staring at a massive enlargement of a holocaust photo in which a Nazi his own beliefs and priorities. There is no clear cut answer. There is no right decision. There is no predictable ending. And that is the strength of the film.

Mamet never presents any member of the anti-Semitic group, but rather deals with issues which never seem to go away. The villain in Homicide is an ideal and not a person.

Mantegna, who I believe is one of the finest actors around, gives a performance which is worthy of Academy Award status. He seems real, and tackles a character who is the most challenging of his career.

The script of the film is deliberate and concise, resembling something of live theater. There are no macho, tough guy cop lines. It is more of a thinking man's detective thriller.

Being a huge fan of Mamet's first two films, I came in to Homicide with high expectations, and was not let down. It is the best film of the year to date.

A Gangster's Education

Billy Bathgate is a smart young man. He has seen his mother struggle in a poverty-stricken Bronx in the mid-thirties and he wants to do better. When legendary gangster Dutch Schultz takes him into the gang, his whole world starts turning around. By the time his adventure is over Billy will have witnessed the rise and fall of one of the most notorious gang leaders of that era.

Vangelis Savva

His adventure is not always fun and games. Along the way Billy is exposed to a number of brutal murders, the result of Dutch's wild temper. He is even punched in the face to cover up bloodstains that spilled on a carpet. His most dangerous experience, however, is falling in love with gorgeous Drew Preston, Dutch's "girlfriend," whom he calls Miss Preston even when they are in bed together. Billy is there when Dutch moves the gang to upstate New York for trial, when Dutch and his accountant Otto hold meetings, and when Dutch throws one of his long-time accomplices overboard. In short, Billy's adventure is far from being one huge, carefree roller-coaster ride.

Director Robert Benton revolutionized the gangster genre back in 1967 when he scripted Bonnie and Clyde. Working on a Tom Stoppard script based on E.L. Doctorow's best-selling novel, Benton's absolutely straight, conventional direction prevents this film from being what it could and should be: an original classic. In terms of pure, straight forward entertainment Billy Bathgate succeeds. But the fire is not there as events unfold and the audience can feel its predictability halfway through the movie.

Billy Bathgate is at its very best when Dustin Hoffman is on hand. His Dutch Schultz is an intense portrait of a man who can't control his violent outbursts and sees betrayal all around him, combined with a lethal sense of humor. Hoffman completely dominates the film, his performance being matched only by that of Steven Hill's Otto, his wise financial advisor and right-hand man.

Unfortunately, the same cannot be said for Loren Dean, a newcomer to the screen, who fails to appear convincing as Billy, or Nicole Kidman's Drew whose role seems to be rather underwritten. Bruce Willis in his short turn as the man who betrayed Dutch is, as always, fun to watch.

Credit should also be given to the production design team whose recreation of the 1930's gives the film an extremely authentic look and to Nestor Almendros' stunning cinematography.

The word out on this film before it was even released was that it would be one big disaster because of budget problems and personality clashes between Hoffman, Benton and screenwriter Stoppard. Well, Billy Bathgate is hardly a disaster. On the contrary, this is a rather entertaining movie, beautifully shot and with a couple of very arresting, enjoyable performances.

It's only a shame that Billy Bathgate never quite fulfills its great potential which is largely attributed to its predictability. However, in all fairness, Billy Bathgate is fun to watch, and in a drained, stagnant '90's Hollywood, that actually registers as an achievement.

A Double Dose Of Poe

George A. Romero and Dario Argento are two of the biggest names in small horror films, and the very idea of these two talents collaborating on a single project is enough to make genre fans salivate. What's amazing is how the result of this melding of the minds could possibly be so dumb, amateurish, and non-frightening.

Adam Meyer

Romero's credits include Monkey Shines and Creepshow, but his tombstone will have the legend "director of Night of the Living Dead." Italian filmmaker Argento has brought such utterly bizarre movies as Suspiria and Creepers to American shores. Considering these two men's talents, Two Evil Eyes is an unfortunate case of the whole being less than the sum of its parts.

The first segment of the movie is Romero's adaptation of "The Facts in the Case of M. Valdemar." A treasure-hunting woman named Jessica (Adrienne Barbeau) is married to the very old and very wealthy Valdemar. She and her lover, the doctor, concoct a scheme to swindler Valdemar out of his money using hypnosis.

Then the old bastard dies, and Jessica and the doctor must pretend he's alive for two more weeks (until they get the rest of the money). They bring him down to the basement of the Gothic style house (of course) and store him in a coffin-like freezer.

Turns out the old man looks dead but isn't, not quite. Next thing they know he's talking without moving his lips, and the movie descends into utter stupidity.

The camera work is as uninspiring as in an episode of Monsters, and the script is dreadful. Somehow the actors' professionalism and the quick pace keep it interesting—for awhile, anyway. Romero must have done a good imitation of one of his own zombies during filming, because this looks like the work of a film student.

In "The Black Cat," photographer Rod Usher (Harvey Keitel)—if nothing else, Argento knows his Poe—is bothered by his girlfriend's (Madeiline Potter) feline. It's obvious that their relationship is deteriorating, and there are suggestions she may be a witch. Rod tortures the cat in the name of art.

When the girlfriend finds out, she decides to leave him, but Rod kills her, shoves her in a closet, and builds a wall—with shelves, no less—to hide her body. The cat reappears, and Rod kills it again, but you can't keep a good cat down.

As anyone familiar with his work has come to expect, Argento's screenplay is weak and disjointed. Unlike Romero he overcomes the flatness of his own writing with diverse camera techniques. The dream of the witch trial is stunning, and contains hints of the director's best work. However, at seventy minutes this is far too long, considering it's plot is barely strong enough to support it for a half hour.

What it comes down to is whether you'd rather pay seven bucks to see a couple of horror greats badly underachieve in Two Evil Eyes, or stay at home, find a comfortable chair, and read some Poe.

Unlawful Knowledge at the Knick

Van Halen's concert at the Knickerbocker Arena on Wednesday, October 23rd was an amazing performance of old and new classics.

Lance Vallis

Opening the show was the intense, hard-driving "Poundcake," followed by "Judgement Day." Lead singer Sammy Hagar then addressed the crowd and said, "I know it's been a while since we've been here; I'm not gonna apologize though, instead of apologizing we're just gonna play for a real long time." Lead guitarist Eddie Van Halen tore into the opening riff of "Runaround" off his newest album, For Unlawful Carnal Knowledge.

"We played at the Hard Rock Cafe today," Hagar said after the song. "There were about 300 people inside and 500 outside. We're a little sobered up now." The band then played the OU812 hit "When It's Love."

Van Halen was in good spirits that night, constantly joking to each other, such as when Eddie untuned Sammy's guitar in the middle of a song or when Sammy whipped Eddie with an American Flag/banner during a guitar solo. All in good fun, of course.

Although the band was a little erratic in their execution of material, they continued to prove for the most part why they are considered one of the most influential bands in rock and roll today. Sammy's voice was as clear and as in-tune as ever. Eddie, perhaps not as fluent as he once was, nevertheless skillfully strutted his stuff. Drummer Alex Van Halen and bassist Michael Anthony were in fine form as well.

Each band member also gave their own solo performance. Following "When It's Love" was a drum and bass solo. Michael Anthony completely revolutionized one's previous notion of slap bass. His style would more appropriately be called pound bass.

Sammy Hagar sang a song entitled "Where Eagles Fly," a soft acoustic number, definitely a highlight of the show.

And, of course, there was Eddie. For twenty minutes he played much of his solo work ranging from the first album to the last. He combined the soft, subtle "316" with the chaotic masterpiece "Eruption," plus a few more of his own little riffs and licks.

After jamming through some more songs like "Panama," "You Really Got Me," and Hagar's hit "I Can't Drive 55," the band retreated backstage, only to return moments later for their encores, the anthem "Jump," followed by "On Top of the World." A fireworks display concluded the show. Van Halen proved they know there's only one way to rock.

'Tonight We Improvise' - A Play Within a Play

On Saturday night, I decided to go see Tonight We Improvise, at the RPI Playhouse. I wondered why I went to see the play in the first place. Ah, my suite mate was in it. That still does not excuse this from being an objective review. Hell, this is what you get for entrusting art to the hands of future engineers (that might explain why the scenery was done so nicely).

Jani Kim

The play was written by Luigi Pirandello, the Nobel Laureate. It centers on actors trying to employ a new technique of improvisation in their next play. They were actors playing actors who were playing characters for their play, so one can sense the confusion about to settle in. The play within the play deals with a typical Sicilian relationship, the husband being jealous of his wife. This husband is so jealous of her that he isolates her from her own family, and from singing (something for which she has a passion). When she learns that her own sister made it as an opera singer, she becomes convinced that she should have been the one. Struggling with her past and how her husband treats her, she collapses, and so does the actress portraying her.

Throughout the entire play, the playwright shifts the mode of reality between the actor's world of confusion in improvising and the world of the play for which these actors were improvising. He seems to point out the life-like side of theatre. The whole play is vomiting stupidity all over the place. First of all the director shouldn't have chosen this play. This is such an innovative and delicate task that only few can successfully get away with, and unfortunately, he just got tomatoes thrown at him. Secondly, the overall cast is lacking. Most of the actresses were so inexperienced that I wonder if the director was on something of my wits, I'll go to my physics lectures.

when the audition took place. A few of them were good, like the two leading players and a few minor ones. Humor was also carried out nicely by The Character Actor playing a drunk-happy man who is over powered by his wife.

The play wasted its innovativeness by overusing the planted actors in the audience. They became too distracting. This was while the director in the play launched a 15-20 minute lecture on the connection between theatre and life. Heck, if I want to pay someone to bore me out of my wits, I'll go to my physics lectures.

The scenery, the costumes, and the props were elaborate, but unnecessary. The scene shifts were just time-consuming.

The play did incorporate a cool night club scene using a scrim. The mood created was something like the one from The Fabulous Baker Boys.

The last thirty minutes seemed to be going well, focusing on nothing else but The Leading Actress and The Leading Man. The emotions involved were building up intensely for the climax, except... the climax never came- not until some time later. The play lost its last chance of redeeming itself because of a dragging moment.

Tonight We Improvise is incoherent. It has too many things going on at once. At some points that was intentional, but often I was trying to figure out what the core of the story was. Little scenes that had meaning in the script were handled poorly so that I found myself questioning their role in the play.

Sarah McLachlan
Solace
Arista Records

Sarah McLachlan's last album, Touch with its elaborate musical arrangements, was a great vehicle to show off her beautiful, flowery voice.

Her latest effort, Solace, sees her take a turn into a simpler, more folk-oriented sound. It seems that she is trying to become another Sinead O'Connor, but she lacks the local power to do this. In Solace her voice is left to stand on its own, and its faults become more pronounced. The lesson that should be learned from this album clearly is... When you have a successful formula, don't stray from it.

Billy Falcon
Pretty Blue World
Polygram Records

While listening to this CD it is amazing how many different musicians were brought to mind. I thought of John Cougar Mellencamp, Tracy Chapman, Bon Jovi, Huey Lewis and the News, but most of all, Bruce Springsteen. This is kind of a tribute to him, but as much as Billy Falcon would like, he'll probably never attain the same status. Unlike most artists, I doubt this would disappoint him. According to the artist bio on the inside cover, he is happy with this album and proud of its content, wanting little else from his music.

The music is pretty simple, and all the songs focus on love or some kind of relationship. There are no spectacular guitar riffs or profound political statements, just straightforward rock.

Most of the songs are pretty much average, but a few seem to stick in your mind. The first track, "Power Windows" is one of the two or three songs I truly liked. It tells the story of two teenagers in love, who've "Got no power windows/got no power breaks/don't got no power nuthin'/but they've got what it takes...they got the power of love." The lyrics won't win any awards, but the song conjures up a great image, and its got a chorus you'll sing to yourself while walking to class.

The fifth track, "Die Twice," is another song people can relate to and a chorus you'll hum without realizing. It was one of his faster tunes, and reminded me a lot of Springsteen, but just fell short of the Boss' quality.

He shows good range in the different styles he plays. His best slower songs include "Pretty Blue World," "Not Funny Anymore," and "Love Don't Stop." His faster songs include "Gettin' Married in the Morning" and "My New Girlfriend." Hints of Bob Dylan and Chapman can be found in "Heaven's Highest Hill" and "Oh Boy."

He may not make the charts in the United States, but he'll probably get really big in Japan, but if you don't believe me, just listen to Pretty Blue World.

Do we really want to be like Barbie?

Have you taken a look at Barbie lately? Yes Barbie, that blond-haired, blue eyed beauty that you or your sister played with. She's come a long way since her prom partying days. Now in-between planning dates with Ken, she's working out at the gym and practicing medicine, always managing to maintain that hourglass figure and brilliant smile.

A lot of little girls grow up with Barbie. They dress her in expensive looking clothes and whisk her away to one exciting adventure after another. Barbie always knows what to say. Her shoes always match, she always has money and hey, there's always Ken to wine and dine her. Life is perfect, for Barbie at least. But what about Barbie's fans? The children that grow up with her? Do they imagine themselves in her shoes, with a knockout body and brains to match? Or do they see themselves as they are? A little overweight perhaps, with glasses, and parents that can't afford to buy the must have or die outfit? Most girls play with Barbie, or something like it, when they're growing up. Do these unrealistic first impressions of femininity have an effect on the woman to be?

Look at the world around you and the answer is obvious. The fashion model figure that women long for is painfully similar to Barbie's. Even after all the work of ERA, most women still tend to center their life around men. How often have you heard a female friend utter the phrase, "How will I live without him?" And now, how many times have you heard a man utter, "How can I live without her?" It happens, but not as often. That's not because men are less sensitive than women. It is because women are trained, from childhood, to please men. Like Barbie, they're taught to look their best so a Ken will notice them. Toy companies put out cosmetics for children, starting a habit that will last a lifetime. As a girl grows older, she is swamped by a media that preaches, "You need a man to be happy!" Commercials for diet soda show bikini clad women, getting the guy by flaunting their perfect body. Women's magazine articles tell readers what to do when he's distant and how to keep the romance alive. And if by chance you don't have someone special, there's sure to be an article for the single woman, "Six surefire ways to get him to notice you."

From birth till old age, women are given a role in life by society. Look hot so you can get someone good, and while you're at it, hold down a job and have a few children. Sure, women are becoming more accepted in the workplace, but the victory is a hollow one, since nothing else has really changed for women since they got the right to vote. Women are still primary care givers in a family, they're still expected to look ageless, only now, thanks to modern thinking, they should also have a career. In other words, be just like Barbie. The perfect woman.

Obviously, it is time for some new role models. Instead of idealizing the woman that has it all, how about honoring the woman that makes the best with what she has, and is happy. Nothing more, nothing less. And maybe in the meantime, someone can work on altering Barbie's 36-20-32, and turn her plastic into something a little more realistic.

Privileges should be equal

The sky opened to a serene misty gray. Clouds swayed with the dancing breeze, birds sang to wake the morning sun and a man on the corner was scratching his crotch. His hand gracefully caressed his inner thigh and slowly worked his way in and around the organ of choice. His face expressed severe concentration- his mouth gaping, liquid forming at the corners; his eyes glazed and bluebird centered on the top of his head sang soft morning melodies. Mission accomplished satisfactorily, he leisurely removed his hand, coughed a nice "lungy" and pleasantly transferred the coagulative mass onto the sidewalk.

Alisa K. Gibsman

It was not a block past this certain fellow, that I happened to come across him again. Of course in the early morn my eyes were playing tricks because he had changed his pants from blue to green and his hair looked much lighter in the emerging sun. But there he was. This time, his strong, masculine finger aggressively searched for something hidden deep within his nose and I was lucky enough to observe him discovering it.

Every block I passed; I saw this man. I think he knew I was watching so he changed a lot to conceal his true identity.

When was the last time you screamed to a woman, "Hey babe, pick me a winner?" or watch them search around their crotch for the spot, or burp, fart or pick their underwear out of their behind? Never (Okay, hardly ever). Women have to maintain an appearance; they must guard their every move so they will be seen as well mannered good little girls; while men's normal habits are accepted dysfunctions.

Women continually get the raw end of the deal in a society completely catering toward men. Women must always hold their tongues or their burps. I'm not condoning burping and farting, but damn it if they can, why can't we! It is valued as almost a God like activity which only men can partake.

I demand my share of burping and farting and throw in some crotch scratching too! You would think that for all our restraint to be prim and proper we would be awarded with some form of recreation. Wrong. They go out and playhockeyfootballbaseballssoftballstickballbasketballetc. etc. We sit rocking, knitting socks or something in our customary crossed leg position. Sometimes, we get real lucky and they'll ask us to come watch. Oh boy, the thrill, "No thanks darling, I think I'll knit."

These sport get-togethers enforce what I call the gas-passing, fluids-flying, itchy scratchy syndrome (affects 15 and up). There's a secret meeting place, excluding the entire female race, where they learn new habits which they practice devoutly.

I'm not saying there is nothing for women to do; there's almost nothing. There is shopping, eating (a favorite), talking with friends, eating, talking, reading, waiting, I'm sure there are a few physical activities, eating and eating. There are solitary activities like aerobics or jogging. I've tried organizing co-ed sport games, but the men don't feel that playing with girls is serious or real. I know there are women who enjoy playing the frail helpless role, but that is the way they were raised. If they realized they would be taken seriously they would learn to love the sport. I know it's hard to believe, but women are competitive by nature. Instead we watch or wait or play canasta, which I hate.

Male sports are intricately woven into our lives. What dominates the back of every newspaper, or closes every newscast? The all-powerful sports section. You can't get away from it. The minute one sport ends another begins and they overlap forever and forever. Try talking to your boyfriend/husband/whatever on Sundays from September to January.

Men study sports and all it's accompanied habits like a cult. I'm convinced that all men are in a conspiracy against women. They bond on every sport date, play, artifact and issue- able to tell you who was the quarterback in the '69 series (my boyfriend promptly informed me in a most mechanical voice, "Jets vs. Colts. Broadway Joe pulled the greatest upset in Super Bowl history with his bootleg left with seconds remaining for the gamer. I think it was 16-17, but don't hold me to it." Ladies and gentleman was 1 year old at time of this game.) Or who hit the most homeruns in major league history (Hank Aaron- 755) My beau went on to babble about some Japanese guy who hit over 800, but I stopped listening) and that the shot heard 'round the world was really Bobby Thomson's homer in the Giants' pennant. They even have their own language like heat, hoops, four-four speed, gun and stroke. I'm convinced they're secret codes.

You think I'm overreacting to this butt-picking sport-thing? It's just the simplest of devices used to separate and categorize men and women.

Man-Big, mean tough guy able to scratch balls in any condition. Up to the minute knowledge of all sports happenings including complete histories, and must high-five with any acknowledgement, or accomplishment. Woman- Sweet, soft thing, looks pretty, cheers man on, always crosses legs, shaves legs and says excuse me. These differences apply to physical appearance as well. Guys go unshaven and become sexy. Who was the last girl you saw with hairy legs and armpits you found sexy? Women spend hours priming their appearance to perfection with make-ups, hair techniques and clothes. We roll out of bed and we're letting ourselves go; they do and there cute and scruffy- not to mention fully prepared to roll around in the mud or field. This all dates back to the different ways boys and girls are treated. Girls are supposed to be as soft and pretty as possible and wait for a prince to gallop by on a white horse, sweeping off her feet; unfortunately he'll be holding a polo club.

Where are our just rewards? Doesn't being good deserve something? I'm tired of sitting on the sidelines; I want to play! I want fart! Women must be allowed the same disgusting privileges as men, so the basis for the exclusion and separation of women is stopped Until you see the women standing next to the man on the street, the moonlight caressing her body as she passionately claws her left breast and then slowly, carefully lifts her right leg; bending it slightly upward and letting her aroma flow out into the night mist; then, only then, can we finally can be considered a civilized equality.

The right to die is yours

To The Editor

She wrote, if God won't come to me, I'm going to find God."

On October 23, she found him... the only way she could.

Her name was Majorie Wantz. With the assistance of a Dr. Jack Kevorkian, whose profession is to aid the sick, she took a lethal dose of sodium pentathol.

Her friend's name was Sherry Miller. With the assistance of a Dr. Jack Kevorkian, who once took an oath to give no harmful medicine, she inhaled a mask full of carbon monoxide.

Michigan State Senator Fred Dillingham says Dr. Kevorkian, who helped a victim of Alzheimers commit suicide last year, is a serial killer. He wants to, as quoted by the New York Times, "punch Kevorkian's lights out." Washington State says Dr. Kevorkian is the leader of a new medical order. They want to legalize what he did on November 5 with Initiative 119.

I say, it doesn't matter. Because until it happens to you and you alone, what happened in Michigan two weeks ago is none of your goddamned business.

They hurt. They were in a raw agony that neither you or I have ever come close to comprehending. Majorie Wantz was once a happily married mother of two, before her neighbors down the street could hear her screams. Sherry Miller was a successful teacher's aide, before the ten-stop and think, TEN-operations that left her in diapers, unable to feed herself.

But, of course, we mustn't allow vague concepts such as PAIN, AGONY, and QUALITY OF LIFE to interfere with what is just and right:ETHICS. If we do, after all, we run the alarming risk of re-evaluating our entire values of medicine and human rights. Yes, more and more physicians may be finding the continued maintenance and treatment of horrifyingly damaged, hopelessly destroyed persons to be... well unethical. But a doctor can learn, must learn, how to brace himself against a patient's pain. Against a patient's protestations. Against a patient's screams that this is not worth it, that eternal oblivion has to be better than the indefinite torture of a raving cancer or the humiliating cerebral destruction of Alzheimer's. Without a decade of medical schooling, what can a patient possibly know? Nothing. The patient knows nothing. He only suffers.

He vowed, "I shall give no harmful medicine."

But maybe Dr. Kevorkian thought about just what "harmful medicine" can be. Majorie Wantz cried out in her suicide note, "I do not call this living, never getting out - what it's like to go to a grocery store? Or go for a walk?" But so what? As long as she was still living-well. let's say breathing, that's all that matters-she wasn't being harmed, was she? Her medicine- no it was doing nothing to ease the torture, but that doesn't it was harmful, does it? What is so harmful about medicine that keeps you wheel chair bound, helpless, agonized as long as you still breathe? Don't you agree?

How dare those two women! The unspeakable selfishness of bringing this crisis to their families, the medical profession, the nation, just to end their pain! Yes I sit here comfortably at my desk, a healthy twenty-year old who can study, laugh, get drunk, enjoy life-but does that mean I don't have the right to judge two dead women in Michigan? If I can't judge them, who can?

Who can?

She wrote, "I Majorie Wantz, want everyone to know that this is my decision and no one else's."

May I never find myself in that hell. I don't know what I'll do if I am. But let it be my decision...and no one else's.

Vote Democrat in 1992

To The Editor

If you asked anyone on the street three or four months ago, who was going to be the President elect in 1992, the answer would have surely been George Bush. Every person that I know from my father to my housemate was convinced that Bush/Qualye 92' would be a resounding success and an affirmation by the electorate of the Republican agenda. On the strength of the war/conflict victory alone, they claimed, Mr. Bush would destroy any Democratic hopeful. Three or four months later, the easy Bush landslide that had been predicted is more uncertain than ever.

Eleven years of Reagan/Bush Republicans have forced the United States to pay a drastic toll in education, health care and every aspect of social service. The economy that the Republican Party has been so fond of accelerating has suddenly dropped dead at our feet. Mr. Bush can proudly claim to have provided our country with its slowest period of growth in the post-war era. Many analysts have stated that Mr. Bush will not be hurt by the current and continuing recession, but recent opinion polls show Mr. Bush slipping from his post-conflict high of 88% to a 47% rating of approval.

The truth is, that when you add up the recession, the failed goals of the Iraq conflict, the Savings and Loan debacle and Mr. Bush's "I'll be on the golf course" domestic policy, what you get is a dysfunctional presidency in the tradition of U.S. Grant and Warren Harding: A President that is open to all suggestions and willing to go the extra mile to promote his foreign policy while our country suffers the brutal consequences of presidential neglect.

As the election of 1992 approaches, Americans will be faced with a serious dilemma. Should they return an executive to office whose non-domestic policy and continuing reliance on supply side economics have proven only failure, or should the electorate send a clear message to the Republican party by electing a Democratic challenger? A Democrat who could articulate and implement a progressive policy that would substantially improve Americas declining status as the leading political and economical force on our planet.

Believe it or not, the SUNY Albany populous can have a say in the future of our country. If you are interested on terminating the decade of Republican delinquency, the University Democrats meet every Monday at 8:00 pm in Campus Center 361. Next Year Washington.

More efficient bussing

To The Editor:

On Monday, October 14th at 9:30 am, I waited on the corner of Western and Partridge for a SUNYA bus. At 9:43 another one passes and at 9:46 yet another one. As fellow students grumbled while trekking up to a more fortunate stop, I wondered why the bus system seems to fail in effectively providing transport to students at times when we need it most. I find that it comes down to this: an unreasonable inequity of bus service distribution throughout the day.

It puzzled me that when rider flow is at its lightest (especially in the waking hours on the morning and late evenings), there are trails of two, sometimes three practically empty buses which travel so close together, they resemble connected train cars. Yet, at the peak hours of the day, the buses along Western Avenue tend to travel infrequently considering the increased demand. This situation forces riders to crowd at the early stops of both the Draper and Wellington lines, resulting in the untimely cramming of the buses and the passing of riders who often desperately need the service at the appointed time. I cannot tell you how disconcerting and frustrating it is to faithfully wait at a stop for fifteen minutes or more, only to be left behind by filled buses one after the other.

I understand that the bus schedule has been devised to provide optimum service throughout the day but despite good intentions, there is a definite imbalance in the ration of bus availability and amount of ridership by counting each boarding passenger, students can request that the bus garage use that information to balance out the service discrepancy and enhance out the service discrepancy and enhance scheduling. I urge fellow riders to write a letter to Megan Beidl at the Plant Administration so as to communicate the problem and offer additional suggestions. Let's all become involved in getting the SUNYA buses to finally provide the adequate service.

38% is way too much

To The Editor:

In response to Keith Starlin's November 1 column "Germany is Not Alone", which was written as a retort to my October 22 column "Same Old Thing in Germany?", I wish to clarify the purpose of my article. While Starlin seems to think that I have overlooked the injustices done to Native Americans and African Americans, those are precisely the horrors to which I referred when I spoke of our own "sordid history of racism and ethnic prejudice". Starlin also assumes that that I am oblivious to the other waves of xenophobia and right-wing extremism taking place in the world, which I am not. However, the purpose of my article was not to ramble on about every such instance, present and past, in every country in the last three hundred years, (for even his list would be incomplete in that respect) but to provide a concise and critical account of what is going on in a specific country: Germany.

Am I picking on Germany? Yes. Germany is the only nation in the history of mankind which built factories for the sole purpose of murdering thousands of people at one time. Although I am appalled by our history of slavery, and while I am opposed to repression, racism, and xenophobia anywhere, I think systematic annihilation (i.e. the Nazis "Final Solution") is of a different genre. While the events in France or Italy (the instances Starlin cited in his column) may shock me as well, large waves of neo-Nazi violence in Germany is for me most shocking of all. It is difficult to judge evil, but I bet if Dante were around he wouldn't put the men who forced the Indians off their land and the men and women who ran the death camps at the same level of the Inferno.

I single out Germany in memory of the millions of victims of the holocaust, including one third of the Jewish people, including some family members I might have known. In effect, I single out Germany because Germany singled out us. In the grand scheme of things, Mr. Starlin, I do find it safe to say that in light of Germany's prominent place in the world today, we can and should expect more from Germany than neo-Nazi violence (400 attacks this year), and 21% and 38% (of eastern and western Germans, respectively) who claim to sympathize with "radical right tendencies" (October 1 1991 New York Times) "i.e., neo-Nazi" to quote Mr Starlin. Somehow, that 38% just does not compare with one nationally spurned neo-Nazi freak running for governor in Louisiana.

court did not seek her out. She sought us out," Mandell said.

"It remains the opinion of the court that, despite Ms. Van Dyke's statement, the questions regarding this matter remain officially unresolved," the court said in its decision Friday.

Mandell said there would be an investigative hearing Tuesday evening at 9:15 pm in CC361. Several members of SA and ASUBA have been subpoenaed to testify, including Weitz, SA Vice President Nicole Sharpe, Central Council Chair Cindy Goldberg, Internal Affairs Chair Judy Wolpoff, and Central Council representative Vencent Lewis. Mandell said more people may be served with subpoenas Tuesday, if necessary.

In response to Van Dyke's charges of interference, Mandell said it "is the job of the court to hear cases that deal with interpretation of the SA Constitution and any disputes that arise from that Constitution. This goes for any SA-funded or -recognized group."

emotional. When they see the ball, they want to charge it. Instead, we high-pressured the outlet passes and contained."

Former Albany coach Aldo Nardiello, who was in attendance, noticed the same thing. "(The Danes) did what they had to do - they high-pressed them and frustrated them."

Little did Nardiello, who now coaches Union College, realize, that his old team was headed to a different tournament than his new one. Union, who was ranked seventh in last week's Upstate New York poll, snuck into the NCAAs and will face top-seeded Ithaca. Cortland plays University of Rochester in the other regional semifinal.

World Series was full of mysteries

By Adam Meyer
ASPECTS EDITOR

The 1991 World Series had it all: come-from-behind victories, extra-inning heroics, great defense, spectacular pitching, awesome offense, and disgruntled Native Americans.

The middle of the Pirates batting order proved how difficult it is to hit with one hand on your throat. But the Braves would not lie down before the Twins, providing a fight to the very last. Atlanta was like Jason Voorhees of Friday the 13th fame: every time you thought the Braves were dead and buried they came back for more.

During the regular season, CBS had often done a less-than-competent job on the Game of the Week, but it wasn't until they broadcast games almost continually that it became apparent how awful their coverage has been. Why do they keep showing replays in the middle of the action? It's only confusing to those trying to figure out what's going on.

And how about the two stooges, Jack Buck and Tim McCarver? McCarver knows his stuff, and once you've watched enough Met broadcasts you even start to appreciate his sometimes strained attempts at humor. A former catcher for the Phillies and Cardinals, you know he'll get excited by everything the man behind the plate does. ("Did you see Greg Olson catch that pop fly?" "Look at how quickly Brian Harper puts his equipment on after his turn at bat.") In accepting McCarver's shortcoming, however, you also gain a wealth of baseball knowledge and insight.

Then there's his partner, Jack "I state the obvious for a living" Buck. It seems he missed his true calling; he should have been a fortune teller. Funny how Jack can call a runner out the instant is made or announce the ball has been caught even before it touches the glove. I wonder if he reads minds, too.

My favorite line of the Series was when Buck said, "The Twins need to score in the bottom of the ninth to win it." Is that so, Jack? Anyone who couldn't figure that out for themselves should not have been watching the ball game in the first place.

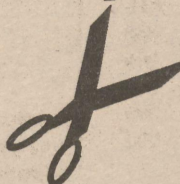

As if there wasn't enough onfield excitement, we had the whole Tomahawk Chop controversy. Funny how no one cared what the Braves did so long as they were in the cellar. Now everyone's upset about the nickname, many saying it's offensive. While they're at it, Cleveland could rename the Indians. There are some teams in other sports that could use renaming, too.

The World Series is full of mysterious occurrences. Who is Mark Lemke? Where did he come from? Did Martians drop him out of a spaceship in Fulton County Stadium and tell him, "You will take the Braves to the World Series"?

But that's nothing compared to the Stepford player, Alejandro Pena. For the Mets he was a mediocre set-up man; for the Braves he looked like the greatest closer to ever take the mound.

In a seven-game series, there had never been three extra-inning games until this year. CBS was very happy. They were not particularly pleased with the Twins, who disposed of the Blue Jays in five, but the Braves did everything they asked for, forcing both the National League Championship Series and the World Series to the limit. It worked out so nicely for the network that I wondered if some of the other players were bribed. A repeat of 1919, perhaps?

On second thought, with the money these guys are earning, they would be more likely to bribe CBS for an extra close-up or two.

Albany soccer upsets New York's #1 team

Baker earns seventh shutout; Danes headed for ECAC playoffs

Cortland

A season-opening three-game losing streak came back to haunt men's soccer yesterday. Despite a season-ending 1-0 victory over Cortland, the #1 team in New York, and an 11-game unbeaten streak, Albany failed to make the NCAA Division III tournament. Instead, it was announced Monday that the Great Danes (9-3-2) will travel to Hobart on Friday for an ECAC first-round playoff game.

Last week started with Albany ranked #10 in the Upstate New York polls.

On Friday, Albany traveled to Cortland in hopes of raising some NCAA eyebrows by knocking off the Red Dragons (14-2-2), who were ranked #5 in the country.

At the 34:55 mark, sophomore Paul Feeney scored his team-leading seventh goal on a wild play. The scene was a frantic one, as nobody could figure out what happened or who scored the goal, according to Albany's statistician. Out of a mass of players in the Cortland crease a ball squirted into the net.

"It was a kick from about 40 yards out," Feeney said, simplifying the action. "Crusher (Albany's Bill Muller) flicked it along, and I put it in."

"It probably wasn't my prettiest goal," he added, "but it was the most important."

The Dragons' fire resurfaced in the second half. Albany's defense was forced to push back a steamrolling Cortland attack. It was the toughest offense Albany has faced this season, said Albany goalie Mike Baker, who made nine saves for his seventh shutout this year.

"(Albany coach Roy Pfeil) scouted them (on Wednesday)," Baker said. "He told us about the quick midfielders and who to mark."

Pfeil must have mentioned the name Larry Manning somewhere during his report. Manning caused many problems for the Danes' defense with his quickness and ball-possession.

With 13 minutes gone in the second half, Manning misdirected a shot at Baker. The partisan crowd collectively gasped as the ball rolled dangerously, parallel to the Albany goal line, before it was booted harmlessly away.

Twenty minutes later, Baker had to fight off Cortland's Mark Stophany to get to a well-placed Manning direct kick.

Manning was superb, but was held scoreless.

"(Paul) O'Looney did a fantastic job on him," Pfeil said. "He stifled him."

In fact, an excellent game was played by the whole Dane defense, especially Mike Avallone, who had his own cheering section behind the Albany bench.

"I could not name one guy who didn't have a great game," Baker said.

The Dragons, who had previously been assured an NCAA bid by winning the SUNYAC conference, were relentless on offense but were a step slow when finishing their opportunities.

"Our footspeed was down," admitted Cortland coach Fred Taube, whose team battled Ithaca to a 0-0 overtime tie on Wednesday. "We may have been a little flat, but it was not a factor. In the second half we got better. Our mental preparation was more of a factor."

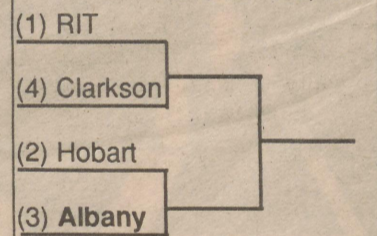

The same may have been true with the Danes, but Pfeil knew how to calm his team down.

"The first half was very emotional," he said. "There was a not a whole lot of concentration. At the half, we worried about containment and defense, not lunging in, which is

Zampino remains at helm as football team wins again

By Matthew Fineman
STAFF WRITER

Albany football's crawl towards the .500 mark continued Saturday, as the team defeated the Sea Gulls of Salisbury State 20-18 in Maryland. The Danes (3-5), owners of a modest two-game winning streak, have won three of their past four.

The Sea Gulls cut a 10-point lead to four when quarterback Len Annetta (15-24, 140 yards) hit running back Pierre Copes (21 rushes, 125 yards) from 17 yards out with 2:37 left in the fourth quarter. A two-point conversion made the score 20-18.

However, a poised Albany squad successfully kept possession for the final 2:32.

The Great Dane rushing attack appears to have gotten in gear. On Saturday, Albany surpassed its season average of 202 yards by gaining 276 yards and two touchdowns on the ground. Five different Danes gained 40 yards or better.

After the first four games (all losses) of the season, in which Albany managed only 31 total points, the offense has scored 107 points in the past four.

Steve Zampino (seven rushes, 51 yards, three of seven passing for 35 yards) started at quarterback for Albany for the second straight week. Zampino helped build a 10-0 halftime lead for the Danes, but was taken out early in the third quarter with an ankle injury. He is probable for Saturday's game against Wagner.

With under five minutes left in the first quarter, the Sea Gulls were forced to punt from their own 23-yard line. Larry Marin returned the short punt to the Salisbury 37.

From there, Albany needed only two plays to grab a 7-0 lead. Zampino hit tight end Eric Hawkins for 13 yards. Then, Ed Lemon (seven rushes, 55 yards) ran 24 yards for the score. Mike Malvin added the extra point.

In the second quarter, Mike Imperato (six rushes, 58 yards) broke loose for 38 yards on third and two, giving Albany a first-and-goal situation from the Salisbury seven-yard line.

The Sea Gull defense tightened, though. On the next three plays, Ben Alston (nine rushes, 40 yards) picked up two yards, Zampino lost four, and Zampino gained four, forcing the Danes to settle for a 22-yard Malvin field goal.

The Great Danes held Salisbury's offense in check in the first half, allowing only 47 yards rushing on 22 carries, and 96 yards in total offense.

Freshman linebacker Chris Locci played a big role once again. Locci, whose season total of 88 tackles leads the team, had 13 against the Sea Gulls. This marked the fifth time Locci has been game-high for the Danes.

Albany's biggest defensive stand came with two minutes remaining in the first half. With the Sea Gulls facing a fourth-and-two from the Albany 10, Salisbury coach Joe Rotellini elected to go for it instead of a short field goal. The Sea Gull ballcarrier was stopped cold for no gain.

"That turned out as maybe the biggest play of the game for us," said Albany defensive back Dan Ornstein. "They challenged our defense and we were ready for them. If they had kicked a field goal it's an entirely different game."

In the second half, Salisbury marched its first possession to the Danes' 19-yard line, but Copes, who gained 119 yards rushing in the second half, fumbled the ball away on a second-down carry.

Albany was in a charitable mood and fumbled the ball rushed right back two plays later.

Tony McCray ran it in from nine yards out to put Salisbury within 10-7.

Jaan Laap (nine rushes, 29 yards, three of 10 passing for 35 yards), Zampino's replacement, then led Albany on a quick eight-play, 65-yard touchdown drive, aided by a 15-yard personal foul against the Sea Gulls. Laap kept an option nine yards for the touchdown with 4:13 remaining in the third.

The teams traded field goals in the fourth before Copes' (eight catches, 98 yards) late touchdown gave Albany a scare.

For the Danes, turnovers were not as big a problem this week. Albany lost one fumble and allowed one interception. In last week's win over Norwich, Albany had four turnovers.

On Saturday, Albany will host Wagner College at 1:00. Wagner's rushing game accounted for 310 yards in a 26-13 win over C.W. Post on Saturday. The Danes will have to look out for running back Woody Davis, who rushed 32 times for 151 yards and two touchdowns.
