More than 2,400 students will attend the 1969 Summer Planning Conference at State University of New York at Albany. The conference, initiated in 1964, will involve seven three-day sessions for freshmen and four two-day orientation periods for transfer students during the weeks of July 1 - August 16.

Dr. Sorrell E. Chesin, associate dean of students, said that the conference is being expanded this year to include a full orientation program for an estimated 1,800 freshmen and 600 transfer students. Edward Bazinet, residence hall director, is serving as coordinator for the conference.

The program involves faculty, administration and students. Staff members are responsible for a variety of activities including academic advisement, counseling and discussion sessions, registration, and other official functions. Much of the program is administered and conducted by university students who are selected as conference assistants.

Approximately 250 freshmen will attend each of the seven conference sessions and 125 transfer students will attend each of four transfer sessions. The program includes opportunity for a variety of informal social and recreational activities.

There is a special program for parents and guests of students, which includes an opportunity to meet with principal university officials. Dr. Clifton C. Thorne, vice president for student affairs, and Dr. Robert Morris, dean of the University College, officially welcome parents at the opening convocation. Campus tours also are provided.

Dean O. William Perlmutter of State University of New York at Albany will direct a seminar for the Danforth Foundation at the University of Chicago beginning August 26. The seminar is part of the program of the National Conference for Danforth Associates, sponsored by the Danforth Foundation.

Some 500 faculty members and their wives from throughout the country will attend the six-day conference, which has as its theme, "The Future University: Can It Realize Its Integrity?" Seminars are organized around three main topics: the power structure of the university, the teaching-learning process, and the university and its environment. Dean Perlmutter will participate in the component dealing with the teaching-learning process and will lead the seminar on the social sciences.

Seven other seminars are included on the program: Natural Sciences, Professor Joseph J. Schwab, University of Chicago; Philosophy and History of Ideas, Professor Anthony A. Nemetz, University of Georgia; General Education, Dean Frederick J. Crosson, University of Notre Dame; Fine Arts, Dr. Joshua C. Taylor, University of Chicago; Poetry and Creative Writing, Professor Catherine Firman, LaVerne College; Literary Criticism, Dr. Jerome Taylor, University of Chicago; and Religion and Human Values, Dr. Thomas A. Langford, Duke University.

The Danforth Foundation, ranking with Ford and Rockefeller, is one of the leading private foundations supporting higher education. It has been particularly influential in exploring the contribution that might be made by religious values.

Wallace W. Taylor, professor of education at State University of New York at Albany, will serve as vice-chairman of the Fourth International Seminar on Special Education. The seminar will be held in Cork, Ireland, from September 8 - 13. He plans to attend concurrent meetings of the World Commission on Special Education. Dr. Taylor has been a member of the commission since 1957, and is presently a vice-chairman.

From September 13-20, Dr. Taylor will serve as chairman of a seminar at the World Congress on Rehabilitation to be held in Dublin, Ireland. He will deal with special education in developing countries.

Professor Taylor received his bachelor of arts and science degree in education at Kansas State Teachers College and his master's and doctoral degrees from State University of Iowa.

Prior to accepting his present position at SUNYA, Dr. Taylor taught education and was head of social studies in The Milne School, SUNYA. Among his supplementary work experiences, Dr. Taylor includes: visiting lecturer at Colorado State College of Education; educational consultant for the American-Korean Foundation; visiting professor at the University of Bergen, Norway; and faculty co-director, International Institute on the United Nations, Amsterdam, Netherlands.

Vincent J. Schaefer, director, Atmospheric Sciences Research Center, (ASRC), State University of New York at Albany, has returned from an excursion into the wilderness of northern Arizona and southern Utah conducting an ecological study.

Some 20 scientists spent several days in the field under primitive conditions near Lake Powell and on a Navajo Indian reservation where groundwork was laid for cooperative plans with the Indians for future ecological study. A complete report on the expedition is expected within a month.

In addition to Dr. Schaefer, six other SUNYA faculty participated in the field study. Included were Harold H. Blum, professor of biological sciences; Victor Rabinowitch, director, Center for Science and the Future of Human Affairs; Alfred Hulstrunk, assistant director, ASRC; Austin W. Hogan, research associate, ASRC; Robert Standish, technical assistant, ASRC; and Frank C. Craighead, senior research associate, ASRC, and ecologist at the university's Jackson Hole Field Station, Moose, Wyo.

Edward Berg, professor of biological sciences at State University of New York at Albany since 1956, has been named director of health related professions at Fresno (Cal.) State College, effective September 8. The announcement was made by Dr. Horace O. Schorling, dean of the school of professional studies at Fresno.

Dr. Schorling said, "The department is particularly fortunate to have obtained the talents of Dr. Berg. His broad experience in the field of health will bring an added dimension to the professional studies program."

A graduate of Brooklyn College, Dr. Berg holds a doctorate from Cornell University. Before joining the Albany faculty in 1956, he taught at Cornell University Medical College and at Manhattan Medical Assistant's School. He is a member of several professional organizations, including the Royal Society of Tropical Medicine and Hygiene and the American Society of Parasitologists.

The biologist has foreign language proficiency in German, French, and Spanish. He has published numerous professional and scientific articles. During the past academic year Dr. Berg participated in the Academic Administration Internship Program of the American Council on Education at State University of New York at Buffalo.

The National Science Foundation has granted $42,000 to the Research Foundation of State University of New York for a project directed by Frederick G. Walz, Jr., assistant professor of biological sciences, State University of New York at Albany. The award will be used to research "Relaxation Spectra of Myosin A."

The investigation consists of temperature-jump kinetic studies and related equilibrium binding experiments on myosin A. The studies are an attempt to elucidate the mechanism of the adenosine triphosphatase activity of myosin A and the nature of different myosin A-Ligand interactions.

Dr. Walz came to the university in 1968 after doing postdoctoral research at Cornell University. He is a graduate of Manhattan College and holds a doctoral degree from State University of New York Downstate Medical Center.

Joseph P. Mascarenhas, associate professor of biological sciences, State University of New York at Albany, has received a grant of $18,000 from National Science Foundation (NSF) through the Research Foundation of State University of New York. His work will deal with "Synthesis of Wall Material During Pollen Tube Development."

Dr. Mascarenhas' long term research interests are in the molecular control of development of higher organisms. He selected pollen for his present research because pollen offers many advantages in a study of the molecular basis of development not found in most other plant or animal systems.

Bachelor and master of science degrees were awarded Dr. Mascarenhas by the University of Poona, India. He received his Ph.D. from the University of California at Berkeley. The biologist taught at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Wellesley College, Amherst College, and Berkeley, before coming to Albany in 1968. He also worked several years as research officer for Parry and Company, Pamba River Sugar Factory, Tiruvalla, India.

Dr. Mascarenhas has published a number of articles in scientific journals and has been the recipient of previous grants from Brown-Hazen Fund of Research Corporation and from NSF.

Jagadish Garg, professor of physics at State University of New York at Albany, has received $12,300 as a renewal of his grant from the National Science Foundation to support his research on the "Analysis and Interpretation of High Resolution Total Neutron Cross Section Measurements" for another year. The total amount of the grant for a period of three years has been $34,000.

The research is being done in collaboration with the faculty at Columbia University where the experimental work was done using their 380 Mev Synchrocyclotron. The investigations are considered important from the point of understanding the structure of nuclei and, in some cases, providing crucial information needed in the design of atomic reactors.

In addition to the investigations, Dr. Garg also is doing research work on the radiative capture of neutrons in collaboration with scientists at the Brookhaven National Laboratory, making use of their high flux beam reactor. Recently the first doctoral thesis of the physics department by a graduate student, Karim Rimawi, was completed making use of the research facility.

Dr. Garg also is engaged in the future planning of the research program in nuclear structure physics at the SUNYA campus as the director of the nuclear accelerator laboratory to be installed next year.

Professor Garg was born in India and received his Doctor of Science degree at Paris University, France. Later he spent three years at Manchester University, England, and five years at Columbia University in New York. He joined the Albany university faculty in 1966. He is a Fellow of the American Physical Society and a Fellow of the Institute of Physics (U.K.). Last year he presented a paper on his research at an International Conference at Tokyo, Japan, and one paper at the International Conference on Neutron Cross Section at Washington. This year on August 25 he will be presenting a paper at the International Conference on Properties of Nuclear States to be held in Montreal.

Hans H. Toch, professor of criminal justice at the School of Criminal Justice, State University of New York at Albany, will direct a program for the training of police officers for non-violence-prone conduct to be set up in Oakland, Calif., under a $84,134 grant received by Dr. Toch from the National Institute of Mental Health, U.S. Public Health Service.

The retraining unit for violence-prone officers will take the form of a research group concerned with police-civilian violence. Preclassified violence-prone officers will be assigned to the unit as staff members. At first, the officers will engage in secondary analysis of recorded incidents culminating in violence. They then will shift to case study materials and to self-analysis designed to point up the role of officers in producing violence-prone interactions. The officers will explore their own contributions to violence through various techniques of simulation. The next stage of training will consist of a problem-solving effort to originate and rehearse non-violence-prone interpersonal responses. Monitoring and evaluation procedures will allow feedback and permit a systematic description of training results.

Evaluation of training will include the comparison of performance of trainees and a matched control group of non-trained violence-prone officers. The graduates of the program for whom training has proved effective will become workshop leaders in a formal effort to extend violence-reducing training to the rank and file of a police department. The workshops will be designed by the trainees and will use techniques similar to those employed in the intensive phase.

Engaged on the training project, headed by Professor Toch, will be Raymond Galvin, visiting associate professor at the School of Criminal Justice whose field is police science and administration; John Guidici, captain of the Oakland Police

Dr. Toch, an alumnus of Brooklyn College, received his doctoral degree in psychology from Princeton University. He is interested particularly in psychological issues in criminal justice. He is the author of the books, "The Social Psychology of Social Movements," and "Violent Men," his most recent published work. More than 2,400 students will attend the 1969 Summer Planning Conference at State University of New York at Albany. The conference, initiated in 1964, will involve seven three-day sessions for freshmen and four two-day orientation periods for transfer students during the weeks of July 1 - August 16.

Dr. Sorrell E. Chesin, associate dean of students, said that the conference is being expanded this year to include a full orientation program for an estimated 1,800 freshmen and 600 transfer students. Edward Bazinet, residence hall director, is serving as coordinator for the conference.

The program involves faculty, administration and students. Staff members are responsible for a variety of activities including academic advisement, counseling and discussion sessions, registration, and other official functions. Much of the program is administered and conducted by university students who are selected as conference assistants.

Approximately 250 freshmen will attend each of the seven conference sessions and 125 transfer students will attend each of four transfer sessions. The program includes opportunity for a variety of informal social and recreational activities.

There is a special program for parents and guests of students, which includes an opportunity to meet with principal university officials. Dr. Clifton C. Thorne, vice president for student affairs, and Dr. Robert Morris, dean of the University College, officially welcome parents at the opening convocation. Campus tours also are provided.

(Editors: Enclosed are lists of freshmen, transfer students, and conference assistants from your area.)

Dr. John W. Saunders, Jr., professor of biological sciences, State University of New York at Albany, has received $40,500 from the National Science Foundation for continuation of his study entitled "Ectoderm-Mesoderm Interactions in Development." In 1967 he received an $80,000 NSF grant to support his work.

Dr. Saunders came to Albany in 1967 from the University of Pennsylvania. He previously taught at Marquette University and at the University of Chicago. He is a graduate of the University of Oklahoma and received his doctorate from Johns Hopkins University.

Dr. H. Craig Sipe, professor of science education, State University of New York at Albany, has received a grant of $110,000 from the U. S. Office of Education. The award, effective September 1, 1969 to August 31, 1971, will be used to fund a fellowship program for training community college science teachers.

The program is made up of five components. They are graduate work leading to the M.S. degree, or its equivalent, in a science discipline; an internship in teaching one of the sciences to freshmen or sophomores; seminars and course work in science teaching; experience with instructional research and development at the community college level; and completion of the requirements for an educational specialist certificate as defined by the department of instruction, School of Education, SUNYA.

Dr. Sipe joined the Albany faculty in 1967. He is a former president and life member of the National Association for Research in Science Teaching. He taught at a number of institutions before coming to SUNYA, most recently at George Peabody, Nashville, Tenn. The educator has written many articles for professional publications. He holds degrees from Bethany College, University of Virginia, and Peabody.

Vincent O'Leary, professor of criminal justice at the School of Criminal Justice, State University of New York at Albany, has been appointed to a nation-wide "Criminal Justice Data File and Statistic System" project.

California, Arizona, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota and New York have received grants from the United States Department of Justice in order to develop a model system for nation-wide use. The 14-month project will run through August 1970.

The project has two principal objectives; namely, to develop and demonstrate that a computerized criminal offender file, containing data from all segments of criminal justice, can be standardized and exchanged between states on a timely basis; and, to computerize current statistical records and explore the feasibility of developing various statistical series and meaningful research data directly from computerized offender files. Professor O'Leary, who joined the Albany faculty last year, recently was appointed by U.S. Attorney General John Mitchell to a 12-member National Advisory Committee to the Law Enforcement Education Program (LEEP).

Nathaniel A. Friedman, associate professor of mathematics, State University of New York at Albany, is the recipient of a $13,600 two-year grant from the National Science Foundation. The award will support his research in "Topics in Ergodic Theory."

Dr. Friedman is the author of the book, "Basic Calculus," published in January 1968 by Scott, Foresman, and Company. Being prepared now for publication by Van Nostrand, is another book, "Introduction to Ergodic Theory." The mathematician also is the author of several articles which have appeared in professional journals.

Prior to joining the faculty at the Albany university last year, Dr. Friedman was visiting lecturer for a year at Westfield College at the University of London. Earlier he had been assistant professor of mathematics for three years at the University of New Mexico. He is an alumnus of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor. He holds graduate degrees from the University of Michigan and from Brown University where he received his doctorate in 1964.

Raymond J. Spenard, programmer for the planning and development office at State University of New York at Albany, has been selected to conduct the Industrial Education Institute's 11th annual international Value Engineering Seminar and Product Analysis Workshop in London during the month of September. Mr. Spenard will be assisted by a team of international value engineering authorities in presenting five days of instruction, demonstration, case study, and idea exchange in the cost reduction philosophy and techniques of value engineering and analysis.

The Industrial Education Institute, with headquarters in Boston and offices in seven overseas countries, is a recognized authority in the educational field for development of more effective utilization of technical and management personnel throughout industry. Through a wide variety of activities the institute has helped more than 20,000 men representing over 5,000 companies, introduce and implement programs that reduce costs, increase production, or improve quality and performance.

Mr. Spenard, prior to joining the staff of the planning and development office at the university, was a value development coordinator at Watervliet Arsenal for the U.S. Government. In that capacity he served as a consultant in value analysis education and training at military installations and industrial concerns throughout the country. He was instrumental in instituting the VE/VA cost reduction program in the Department of the Army.

Final arrangements are being made for non-credit courses to be offered this fall by the College of General Studies at State University of New York at Albany. Among the courses are those concerned with politics, graphics, and reading.

The course in town and country politics will be held on Tuesday evenings from September 9 to October 28. It will consist of lectures, discussions, reading assignments, and visiting lecturers.

Practicing politicians will be included in the list of guest speakers. The course is designed to give a better understanding of the American political scene and an insight into the political processes with emphasis on local government. It will be limited to 30 people. Professor James A. Riedel of the Graduate School of Public Affairs at SUNYA will teach the eight-session seminar. Tuition is $20.

The course in graphics, a studio course, will meet Tuesday and Thursday evenings for 14 weeks. The instructor, Robert M. Cartmell, holds a master's degree in fine arts from the University of Iowa, and was the recipient of the James Nelson Raymond Fellowship in 1961. He has exhibited in Chicago, where he had a one-man show, in Iowa City, and in San Diego. His work is included in private collections in Boston, Chicago, New York, Tunisia, Jamaica and Australia.

In addition to the traditional techniques in lithography there will be emphasis in silk-screen and woodcut. The course is open to beginners and enrollment is limited to 20 students. Registration for the 28 sessions will be $40.

The six-session non-credit reading improvement course begins September 23. The instructor will be Mrs. M. Elizabeth Tibbetts.

Non-Credit Courses

The workshop, to be held Tuesdays from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m., will include practice with reading machines, perception exercises, vocabulary improvement, directed reading with emphasis on finding main ideas, skimming, scanning, retention of facts, and getting the most out of printed material.

A tuition fee of $20 will be charged and enrollment will be limited to 20 students. The course will be given again on October 28.

Individuals who would like to register for the courses should write to SUNYA, College of General Studies, 1400 Washington Avenue, Albany 12203, or call 457-4937 for information.

Eugene Mirabelli, Jr., associate professor of English at State University of New York at Albany, has received a grant from The Rockefeller Foundation to provide him with an uninterrupted period of writing. The $5,000 award, to be given to him through the State University Foundation, Inc., will be used toward Professor Mirabelli's living and professional expenses.

The writer's latest work, now in progress, was begun under a faculty fellowship from the Research Foundation of State University of New York last year. Dr. Mirabelli is the author of two novels, "The Way In," published by Viking Press, New York, in 1968, and by Chatto and Windus, London publishers, in 1969, and "The Burning Air," published by Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston, ten years ago, and by Hutchinson Ltd., London, the following year.

At the university the author has taught courses in creative writing, freshmen composition, English literature, English and American poetry, the American novel between two world wars, and a graduate course on Fitzgerald, Hemingway and Faulkner.

Last year, in a New York Times book review, Martin Levin wrote: "His style is epigrammatic and fragmentary -- but the picture he creates is surprisingly complete." He described the work as a "virtuoso performance" and added, "Juxtaposed with a fine sense of esthetic order are images out of his hero's past, a casual view of postgraduate Cambridge, and a glimmering of a man's future."

In The Saturday Review, Granville Hicks described Professor Mirabelli's second novel as "good". Earlier he had written that the author's first work showed a sensitivity and discipline and a feeling for language. Wrote Mr. Hicks, "As in 'The Burning Air', Mirabelli's style is so gentle, so free from any straining for effect, apparently so guileless, that the reader suddenly discovers with astonishment that this is a work of art."

Professor Mirabelli joined the Albany faculty four years ago. He is an alumnus of Harvard College and received a Master of Arts in writing from John Hopkins University. In 1964 he received his Doctor of Philosophy from Harvard University. His dissertation was entitled "The Apprenticeship of William Faulkner: The Early Short Stories and the First Three Novels".

Arnolds Grava, professor of Romance languages at State University of New York at Albany, is the author of a new book, "A Structural Inquiry into the Symbolic Representation of Ideas," just published by Mouton, with offices in The Hague and Paris. The main purpose of the volume is to inquire into the realm of the symbolic representation of man's knowledge which consists of ideas or concepts.

Professor Grava, whose special fields are French, philosophy, and general linguistics joined the Albany university faculty in 1954. He holds degrees from the University of Lille, France; the University of Riga, Latvia; and from the University of Nebraska where he received his doctorate. He has been the recipient of a Ford Foundation scholarship, a State University of New York Research fellowship, and a Danforth Foundation grant. His writings have been published in several professional journals.

Dr. Grava's latest work covers the functional and structural aspects of concepts as vehicles of the symbolic representation arising from the creative energy or activity of the human mind. He has indicated that both the purpose and the scope of the book were prompted and determined by recent developments of modern science, particularly in cybernetics, which, according to Professor Grava, have made it imperative to view all problems concerning matter or energy in their correlation with philosophy. The central idea of the volume, expressed by a simple analogy between the structure of an atom and that of a symbol-concept, is further based upon the ever increasing scientific evidence which makes the clear-cut decision between mind and matter obsolete.

At the university Professor Grava teaches general linguistics for all language majors, advanced language in French, and graduate seminars on Diderot and Baudelair. He is the co-author of "Diderot Studies," published in Switzerland in 1963. Additionally, Professor Grava has been in charge of the French language examination for the master of arts degree and for a doctor of philosophy candidates from other departments. Currently he is supervising three doctoral candidates in French.

Arthur A. Hitchcock, who has been serving as director of the Two-Year College Development Center of State University of New York at Albany, will assume the chairmanship of the Department of Guidance and Personnel Services in the School of Education in September. He succeeds J. Maxson Reeves who has asked to be relieved of the position in order to return to teaching. Dr. Reeves served as department chairman for five years.

Dr. Hitchcock joined the Albany faculty three years ago after serving for ten years as executive director of the American Personnel and Guidance Association. Long recognized as a leader in his field, he previously held several positions in public and higher education, including posts at the University of Nebraska, Harvard Graduate School of Education, and New England public schools.

Professor Hitchcock, an alumnus of Wesleyan University, holds graduate degrees from Harvard, and from Yale University where he received his doctoral degree. He is a member of several guidance and personnel organizations and, in 1965-66, he served on former Vice President Hubert Humphrey's Task Force on Dropouts.

One of the world's leading plant physiologists, Noburo Kamiya, a professor at Osaka University, Japan, will be at State University of New York at Albany during the coming year. Dr. Kamiya, as visiting professor of biology, will lecture to undergraduate and graduate students at the university as well as at other State University of New York institutions.

While at State University at Albany during the 1969-70 year, Dr. Kamiya also will participate in research in cell physiology, take part in seminars, and give laboratory instruction. His work on the analysis of cytoplasmic streaming using Nitella cells and slime molds now is included in many textbooks of physiology as the outstanding work for analysis of streaming mechanisms in plant cells.

The distinguished biologist was nominated by the Albany University for a National Science Foundation Senior Foreign Scientists Fellowship in its department of biological sciences. His salary will be paid through The Research Foundation of State University of New York, partial support for which is provided by the NSF award for $14,190. His appointment is for the academic year October 1, 1969, through July 31, 1970.

Jai Soo Kim, professor of atmospheric science and physics, State University of New York at Albany, has been named chairman of the department of atmospheric sciences. He joined the faculty in 1967 after having taught for several years at the University of Idaho.

Professor Kim last year was the recipient of a $71,000 grant from the National Science Foundation for research entitled, "A Study of Aurora and Related Phenomena." His current research will extend over a two-year period during which he will observe the aurora with two light sensing devices, called photometers, one at Whiteface Mountain and the other at Green Bank, West Virginia.

The new department chairman studied at Preparatory College, Keijo Imperial University, Korea, before attending the Seoul National University where he received his Bachelor of Science in physics in 1949. He continued his studies later at the University of Saskatchewan in Canada. He holds a Master of Science in physics and doctoral degree, also in physics, from the University of Saskatchewan. He has lectured at academic institutions in Korea, served as a research assistant in the physics department at the University of Saskatchewan, and taught at Clarkson College, Potsdam. He was on the faculty of the University of Idaho for eight years. Many of his articles have been published in professional journals.

George W. Putnam, associate professor of geology, State University of New York at Albany, is the recipient of a $36,400 grant from the National Science Foundation to support his work in petrology and geochemistry of igneous and metamorphic rocks, particularly with respect to metal distribution and the genesis of mineralization and ores.

Professor Putnam is studying the metal distribution, alteration, and petrogenesis of the Superior stock located in Plumas County, California. Stock is a body of igneous rock, which intruded upward into older formations/while in ground plans is roughly circular or elliptical, in cross section may increase downward. In the Superior stock, samples from a large number of well distributed drill cores may be obtained for research purposes. The project, for which the scientist is the principal investigator, is being undertaken to develop from a number of rock properties potentially available from the core, supplemented by minor surface sampling, information to provide a three-dimensional petrogenetic model for the stock. It will involve a relatively large number of analyses by atomic absorption for metals such as copper, lead zinc, and silver, and x-ray spectrographic analysis of bulk rock samples, and x-ray diffraction of analysis of rock alteration effects. The research will be conducted with the cooperation of the California Division of Mines and Geology, which will provide assistance in the splitting of core samples and initial sample preparation procedures, storage of sample splits, and the use of various field equipment.

Research also will be conducted on the Albany university campus where the data will be examined and developed by a computer-based trend surface analysis technique for significant three-dimensional variations. The work will continue for a two-year period

Alice T. Hastings, director of libraries, State University of New York at Albany, will be on sabbatical leave during the fall semester. Her plans include attending the International Book Fair to be held at Frankfurt, Germany, and, upon her return from touring several countries abroad, visiting a number of university libraries throughout the country.

Miss Hastings will make a study of what kinds of statistics are kept by libraries at other academic institutions in regard to the use of manpower. To learn how these statistics are used to lead to more scientific management in the library also will be a part of her project.

The library at the university has received a grant of $61,365 from the U.S. Office of Education under the college library resources program by the Higher Education Act of 1965. It will be used to purchase books and other kinds of library materials, in support of doctoral programs and for other course work in Afro-American studies, atmospheric science and weather modification, criminal justice, public affairs, and social welfare.

Morrison C. Haviland, director of reader services, will be acting director of libraries in Miss Hastings' absence.

Edward Berg, professor of biological sciences at State University of New York at Albany since 1956, has been named director of health related professions at Fresno (Cal.) State College, effective September 8. The announcement was made by Dr. Horace O. Schorling, dean of the school of professional studies at Fresno.

Dr. Schorling said, "The department is particularly fortunate to have obtained the talents of Dr. Berg. His broad experience in the field of health will bring an added dimension to the professional studies program."

A graduate of Brooklyn College, Dr. Berg holds a doctorate from Cornell University. Before joining the Albany faculty in 1956, he taught at Cornell University Medical College and at Manhattan Medical Assistant's School. He is a member of several professional organizations, including the Royal Society of Tropical Medicine and Hygiene and the American Society of Parasitologists.

The biologist has foreign language proficiency in German, French, and Spanish. He has published numerous professional and scientific articles. During the past academic year Dr. Berg participated in the Academic Administration Internship Program of the American Council on Education at State University of New York at Buffalo.

Dean O. William Perlmutter of State University of New York at Albany will direct a seminar for the Danforth Foundation at the University of Chicago beginning August 26. The seminar is part of the program of the National Conference for Danforth Associates, sponsored by the Danforth Foundation.

Some 500 faculty members and their wives from throughout the country will attend the six-day conference, which has as its theme, "The Future University: Can It Realize Its Integrity?" Seminars are organized around three main topics: the power structure of the university, the teaching-learning process, and the university and its environment. Dean Perlmutter will participate in the component dealing with the teaching-learning process and will lead the seminar on the social sciences.

Seven other seminars are included on the program: Natural Sciences, Professor Joseph J. Schwab, University of Chicago; Philosophy and History of Ideas, Professor Anthony A. Nemetz, University of Georgia; General Education, Dean Frederick J. Crosson, University of Notre Dame; Fine Arts, Dr. Joshua C. Taylor, University of Chicago; Poetry and Creative Writing, Professor Catherine Firman, LaVerne College; Literary Criticism, Dr. Jerome Taylor, University of Chicago; and Religion and Human Values, Dr. Thomas A. Langford, Duke University.

The Danforth Foundation, ranking with Ford and Rockefeller, is one of the leading private foundations supporting higher education. It has been particularly influential in exploring the contribution that might be made by religious values.

More than 2,400 students will attend the 1969 Summer Planning Conference at State University of New York at Albany. The conference, initiated in 1964, will involve seven three-day sessions for freshmen and four two-day orientation periods for transfer students during the weeks of July 1 - August 16.

Dr. Sorrell E. Chesin, associate dean of students, said that the conference is being expanded this year to include a full orientation program for an estimated 1,800 freshmen and 600 transfer students. Edward Bazinet, residence hall director, is serving as coordinator for the conference.

The program involves faculty, administration and students. Staff members are responsible for a variety of activities including academic advisement, counseling and discussion sessions, registration, and other official functions. Much of the program is administered and conducted by university students who are selected as conference assistants.

Approximately 250 freshmen will attend each of the seven conference sessions and 125 transfer students will attend each of four transfer sessions. The program includes opportunity for a variety of informal social and recreational activities.

There is a special program for parents and guests of students, which includes an opportunity to meet with principal university officials. Dr. Clifton C. Thorne, vice president for student affairs, and Dr. Robert Morris, dean of the University College, officially welcome parents at the opening convocation. Campus tours also are provided.

(Editors: Enclosed are lists of freshmen, transfer students, and conference assistants from your area.)

Hans H. Toch, professor of criminal justice at the School of Criminal Justice, State University of New York at Albany, will direct a program for the training of police officers for non-violence-prone conduct to be set up in Oakland, Calif., under a $84,134 grant received by Dr. Toch from the National Institute of Mental Health, U.S. Public Health Service.

The retraining unit for violence-prone officers will take the form of a research group concerned with police-civilian violence. Preclassified violence-prone officers will be assigned to the unit as staff members. At first, the officers will engage in secondary analysis of recorded incidents culminating in violence. They then will shift to case study materials and to self-analysis designed to point up the role of officers in producing violence-prone interactions. The officers will explore their own contributions to violence through various techniques of simulation. The next stage of training will consist of a problem-solving effort to originate and rehearse non-violence-prone interpersonal responses. Monitoring and evaluation procedures will allow feedback and permit a systematic description of training results.

Evaluation of training will include the comparison of performance of trainees and a matched control group of non-trained violence-prone officers. The graduates of the program for whom training has proved effective will become workshop leaders in a formal effort to extend violence-reducing training to the rank and file of a police department. The workshops will be designed by the trainees and will use techniques similar to those employed in the intensive phase.

Engaged on the training project, headed by Professor Toch, will be Raymond Galvin, visiting associate professor at the School of Criminal Justice whose field is police science and administration; John Guidici, captain of the Oakland Police Department, who has a degree in public administration; and J. Douglas Grant, president of New Careers Development Organization who has a graduate degree in psychology.

Dr. Toch, an alumnus of Brooklyn College, received his doctoral degree in psychology from Princeton University. He is interested particularly in psychological issues in criminal justice. He is the author of the books, "The Social Psychology of Social Movements," and "Violent Men," his most recent published work. Professor Toch also edited and contributed to the book, "Legal and Criminal Psychology."

Jagadish Garg, professor of physics at State University of New York at Albany, has received $12,300 as a renewal of his grant from the National Science Foundation to support his research on the "Analysis and Interpretation of High Resolution Total Neutron Cross Section Measurements" for another year. The total amount of the grant for a period of three years has been $34,000.

The research is being done in collaboration with the faculty at Columbia University where the experimental work was done using their 380 Mev Synchrocyclotron. The investigations are considered important from the point of understanding the structure of nuclei and, in some cases, providing crucial information needed in the design of atomic reactors.

In addition to the investigations, Dr. Garg also is doing research work on the radiative capture of neutrons in collaboration with scientists at the Brookhaven National Laboratory, making use of their high flux beam reactor. Recently the first doctoral thesis of the physics department by a graduate student, Karim Rimawi, was completed making use of the research facility.

Dr. Garg also is engaged in the future planning of the research program in nuclear structure physics at the SUNYA campus as the director of the nuclear accelerator laboratory to be installed next year.

Professor Garg was born in India and received his Doctor of Science degree at Paris University, France. Later he spent three years at Manchester University, England, and five years at Columbia University in New York. He joined the Albany university faculty in 1966. He is a Fellow of the American Physical Society and a Fellow of the Institute of Physics (U.K.). Last year he presented a paper on his research at an International Conference at Tokyo, Japan, and one paper at the International Conference on Neutron Cross Section at Washington. This year on August 25 he will be presenting a paper at the International Conference on Properties of Nuclear States to be held in Montreal.

Joseph P. Mascarenhas, associate professor of biological sciences, State University of New York at Albany, has received a grant of $18,000 from National Science Foundation (NSF) through the Research Foundation of State University of New York. His work will deal with "Synthesis of Wall Material During Pollen Tube Development."

Dr. Mascarenhas' long term research interests are in the molecular control of development of higher organisms. He selected pollen for his present research because pollen offers many advantages in a study of the molecular basis of development not found in most other plant or animal systems.

Bachelor and master of science degrees were awarded Dr. Mascarenhas by the University of Poona, India. He received his Ph.D. from the University of California at Berkeley. The biologist taught at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Wellesley College, Amherst College, and Berkeley, before coming to Albany in 1968. He also worked several years as research officer for Parry and Company, Pamba River Sugar Factory, Tiruvalla, India.

Dr. Mascarenhas has published a number of articles in scientific journals and has been the recipient of previous grants from Brown-Hazen Fund of Research Corporation and from NSF.

The National Science Foundation has granted $42,000 to the Research Foundation of State University of New York for a project directed by Frederick G. Walz, Jr., assistant professor of biological sciences, State University of New York at Albany. The award will be used to research "Relaxation Spectra of Myosin A."

The investigation consists of temperature-jump kinetic studies and related equilibrium binding experiments on myosin A. The studies are an attempt to elucidate the mechanism of the adenosine triphosphatase activity of myosin A and the nature of different myosin A-Ligand interactions.

Dr. Walz came to the university in 1968 after doing postdoctoral research at Cornell University. He is a graduate of Manhattan College and holds a doctoral degree from State University of New York Downstate Medical Center.

Eugene Mirabelli, Jr., associate professor of English at State University of New York at Albany, has received a grant from The Rockefeller Foundation to provide him with an uninterrupted period of writing. The $5,000 award, to be given to him through the State University Foundation, Inc., will be used toward Professor Mirabelli's living and professional expenses.

The writer's latest work, now in progress, was begun under a faculty fellowship from the Research Foundation of State University of New York last year. Dr. Mirabelli is the author of two novels, "The Way In," published by Viking Press, New York, in 1968, and by Chatto and Windus, London publishers, in 1969, and "The Burning Air," published by Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston, ten years ago, and by Hutchinson Ltd., London, the following year.

At the university the author has taught courses in creative writing, freshmen composition, English literature, English and American poetry, the American novel between two world wars, and a graduate course on Fitzgerald, Hemingway and Faulkner.

Last year, in a New York Times book review, Martin Levin wrote: "His style is epigrammatic and fragmentary -- but the picture he creates is surprisingly complete." He described the work as a "virtuoso performance" and added, "Juxtaposed with a fine sense of esthetic order are images out of his hero's past, a casual view of postgraduate Cambridge, and a glimmering of a man's future."

In The Saturday Review, Granville Hicks described Professor Mirabelli's second novel as "good". Earlier he had written that the author's first work showed a sensitivity and discipline and a feeling for language. Wrote Mr. Hicks, "As in 'The Burning Air', Mirabelli's style is so gentle, so free from any straining for effect, apparently so guileless, that the reader suddenly discovers with astonishment that this is a work of art."

Professor Mirabelli joined the Albany faculty four years ago. He is an alumnus of Harvard College and received a Master of Arts in writing from John Hopkins University. In 1964 he received his Doctor of Philosophy from Harvard University. His dissertation was entitled "The Apprenticeship of William Faulkner: The Early Short Stories and the First Three Novels".

Arnolds Grava, professor of Romance languages at State University of New York at Albany, is the author of a new book, "A Structural Inquiry into the Symbolic Representation of Ideas," just published by Mouton, with offices in The Hague and Paris. The main purpose of the volume is to inquire into the realm of the symbolic representation of man's knowledge which consists of ideas or concepts.

Professor Grava, whose special fields are French, philosophy, and general linguistics joined the Albany university faculty in 1954. He holds degrees from the University of Lille, France; the University of Riga, Latvia; and from the University of Nebraska where he received his doctorate. He has been the recipient of a Ford Foundation scholarship, a State University of New York Research fellowship, and a Danforth Foundation grant. His writings have been published in several professional journals.

Dr. Grava's latest work covers the functional and structural aspects of concepts as vehicles of the symbolic representation arising from the creative energy or activity of the human mind. He has indicated that both the purpose and the scope of the book were prompted and determined by recent developments of modern science, particularly in cybernetics, which, according to Professor Grava, have made it imperative to view all problems concerning matter or energy in their correlation with philosophy. The central idea of the volume, expressed by a simple analogy between the structure of an atom and that of a symbol-concept, is further based upon the ever increasing scientific evidence which makes the clear-cut decision between mind and matter obsolete.

At the university Professor Grava teaches general linguistics for all language majors, advanced language in French, and graduate seminars on Diderot and Baudelair. He is the co-author of "Diderot Studies," published in Switzerland in 1963. Additionally, Professor Grava has been in charge of the French language examination for the master of arts degree and for a doctor of philosophy candidates from other departments. Currently he is supervising three doctoral candidates in French.

Arthur A. Hitchcock, who has been serving as director of the Two-Year College Development Center of State University of New York at Albany, will assume the chairmanship of the Department of Guidance and Personnel Services in the School of Education in September. He succeeds J. Maxson Reeves who has asked to be relieved of the position in order to return to teaching. Dr. Reeves served as department chairman for five years.

Dr. Hitchcock joined the Albany faculty three years ago after serving for ten years as executive director of the American Personnel and Guidance Association. Long recognized as a leader in his field, he previously held several positions in public and higher education, including posts at the University of Nebraska, Harvard Graduate School of Education, and New England public schools.

Professor Hitchcock, an alumnus of Wesleyan University, holds graduate degrees from Harvard, and from Yale University where he received his doctoral degree. He is a member of several guidance and personnel organizations and, in 1965-66, he served on former Vice President Hubert Humphrey's Task Force on Dropouts.

One of the world's leading plant physiologists, Noburo Kamiya, a professor at Osaka University, Japan, will be at State University of New York at Albany during the coming year. Dr. Kamiya, as visiting professor of biology, will lecture to undergraduate and graduate students at the university as well as at other State University of New York institutions.

While at State University at Albany during the 1969-70 year, Dr. Kamiya also will participate in research in cell physiology, take part in seminars, and give laboratory instruction. His work on the analysis of cytoplasmic streaming using Nitella cells and slime molds now is included in many textbooks of physiology as the outstanding work for analysis of streaming mechanisms in plant cells.

The distinguished biologist was nominated by the Albany University for a National Science Foundation Senior Foreign Scientists Fellowship in its department of biological sciences. His salary will be paid through The Research Foundation of State University of New York, partial support for which is provided by the NSF award for $14,190. His appointment is for the academic year October 1, 1969, through July 31, 1970.

University of the Air fall semester courses, which include American history, basic astronomy and beginning German, will be broadcast Saturday and Sunday afternoons and weekday evenings on eight television stations throughout New York State. Credit students may register through any one of 15 participating State University units. They are State University of New York at Albany; State University Colleges at Brockport, Buffalo, Fredonia, Plattsburgh, and Oswego; Corning, Dutchess, Hudson Valley, Nassau, Onondaga, Rockland, and Westchester Community Colleges; State University of New York Maritime College; and Agricultural and Technical College at Alfred. Participating stations are WNDT Channel 13, New York City; WMHT Channel 17, Schenectady; WCNY-TV Channel 24, Syracuse; WXXI Channel 21, Rochester; WNED-TV Channel 17, Buffalo; WPTZ Channel 5, Plattsburgh; WNYC-TV Channel 31, New York City; and WLIW Channel 21, Garden City, L. I.

State University at Albany offers three hours of academic credit for successfully completing Rise of the American Nation (history) and Eye on the Universe (astronomy). The former will be telecast by WMHT Saturdays 1:30 - 2:30 p.m. and 3-4 p.m. and the latter on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, 6:30 - 7 p.m.

A University of the Air catalog providing full details on broadcast schedules, course offerings, participating campuses, tuition and enrollment procedures is available from Univair, P.O. Box 4440, Grand Central Station, New York, New York.

Alice T. Hastings, director of libraries, State University of New York at Albany, will be on sabbatical leave during the fall semester. Her plans include attending the International Book Fair to be held at Frankfurt, Germany, and, upon her return from touring several countries abroad, visiting a number of university libraries throughout the country.

Miss Hastings will make a study of what kinds of statistics are kept by libraries at other academic institutions in regard to the use of manpower. To learn how these statistics are used to lead to more scientific management in the library also will be a part of her project.

The library at the university has received a grant of $61,365 from the U.S. Office of Education under the college library resources program by the Higher Education Act of 1965. It will be used to purchase books and other kinds of library materials, in support of doctoral programs and for other course work in Afro-American studies, atmospheric science and weather modification, criminal justice, public affairs, and social welfare.

Morrison C. Haviland, director of reader services, will be acting director of libraries in Miss Hastings' absence.

John V. Falconeri has been appointed chairman of the department of Romance languages for the new academic year at State University of New York at Albany. He replaces Edwin C. Munro who has been acting chairman of the department. Dr. Munro asked to be relieved of his chairmanship for health reasons.

Professor Falconeri has been a member of the department of Romance languages for the past four years. He is editor of "Theatre Annual," a publication of national reputation and also is on the editorial board of "Modern International Drama," a journal published bi-annually by The Pennsylvania State University Press. His principle research interests are in Spanish and Italian theatre.

An alumnus of the University of Michigan, Professor Falconeri also completed his graduate work there. He has a master of arts degree in Romance languages and Doctor of Philosophy in the same field. His articles have appeared in several professional journals. He edited "Los Duendes Deterministas y Otros Cuentos," a collection of sketches and stories by Enrique Anderson Imbert. He also wrote the introduction, notes, and exercises for the book, designed for the use of students of Spanish.

Jai Soo Kim, professor of atmospheric science and physics, State University of New York at Albany, has been named chairman of the department of atmospheric sciences. He joined the faculty in 1967 after having taught for several years at the University of Idaho.

Professor Kim last year was the recipient of a $71,000 grant from the National Science Foundation for research entitled, "A Study of Aurora and Related Phenomena." His current research will extend over a two-year period during which he will observe the aurora with two light sensing devices, called photometers, one at Whiteface Mountain and the other at Green Bank, West Virginia.

The new department chairman studied at Preparatory College, Keijo Imperial University, Korea, before attending the Seoul National University where he received his Bachelor of Science in physics in 1949. He continued his studies later at the University of Saskatchewan in Canada. He holds a Master of Science in physics and doctoral degree, also in physics, from the University of Saskatchewan. He has lectured at academic institutions in Korea, served as a research assistant in the physics department at the University of Saskatchewan, and taught at Clarkson College, Potsdam. He was on the faculty of the University of Idaho for eight years. Many of his articles have been published in professional journals.

George W. Putnam, associate professor of geology, State University of New York at Albany, is the recipient of a $36,400 grant from the National Science Foundation to support his work in petrology and geochemistry of igneous and metamorphic rocks, particularly with respect to metal distribution and the genesis of mineralization and ores.

Professor Putnam is studying the metal distribution, alteration, and petrogenesis of the Superior stock located in Plumas County, California. Stock is a body of igneous and, rock, which intruded upward into older formations/while in ground plans is roughly circular or elliptical, in cross section may increase downward. In the Superior stock, samples from a large number of well distributed drill cores may be obtained for research purposes. The project, for which the scientist is the principal investigator, is being undertaken to develop from a number of rock properties potentially available from the core, supplemented by minor surface sampling, information to provide a three-dimensional petrogenetic model for the stock. It will involve a relatively large number of analyses by atomic absorption for metals such as copper, lead zinc, and silver, and x-ray spectrographic analysis of bulk rock samples, and x-ray diffraction of analysis of rock alteration effects. The research will be conducted with the cooperation of the California Division of Mines and Geology, which will provide assistance in the splitting of core samples and initial sample preparation procedures, storage of sample splits, and the use of various field equipment.

Research also will be conducted on the Albany university campus where the data will be examined and developed by a computer-based trend surface analysis technique for significant three-dimensional variations. The work will continue for a two-year period
