The University at Albany will open its long awaited Recreation and Convocation Center in the fall of 1991. Intended to supplement the existing Physical Education building, the new Recreation and Convocation Center will provide for women's and men's indoor physical education instruction, intramural and intercollegiate competition and university recreation and fitness programs. In addition, the indoor arena will be used for intercollegiate athletics, speakers, musical performances, and other events, and will seat 4,800 spectators.

The Recreation and Convocation Center was designed to complement rather than compete with the existing architecture of the campus. With a gently sloping lawn area reaching halfway up the exterior walls, the building looks deceptively small. The structure does, however, house 109,000 square feet of usable space for athletic activities, and is connected to the existing Physical Education building by an underground tunnel.

The Recreation and Convocation Center contains four racquetball/handball courts and four squash courts. An aerobics exercise room has been installed with special synthetic flooring. The fitness center is equipped with Nautilus machines, rowing ergometers and exercise bikes for a complete strength and cardiovascular development program.

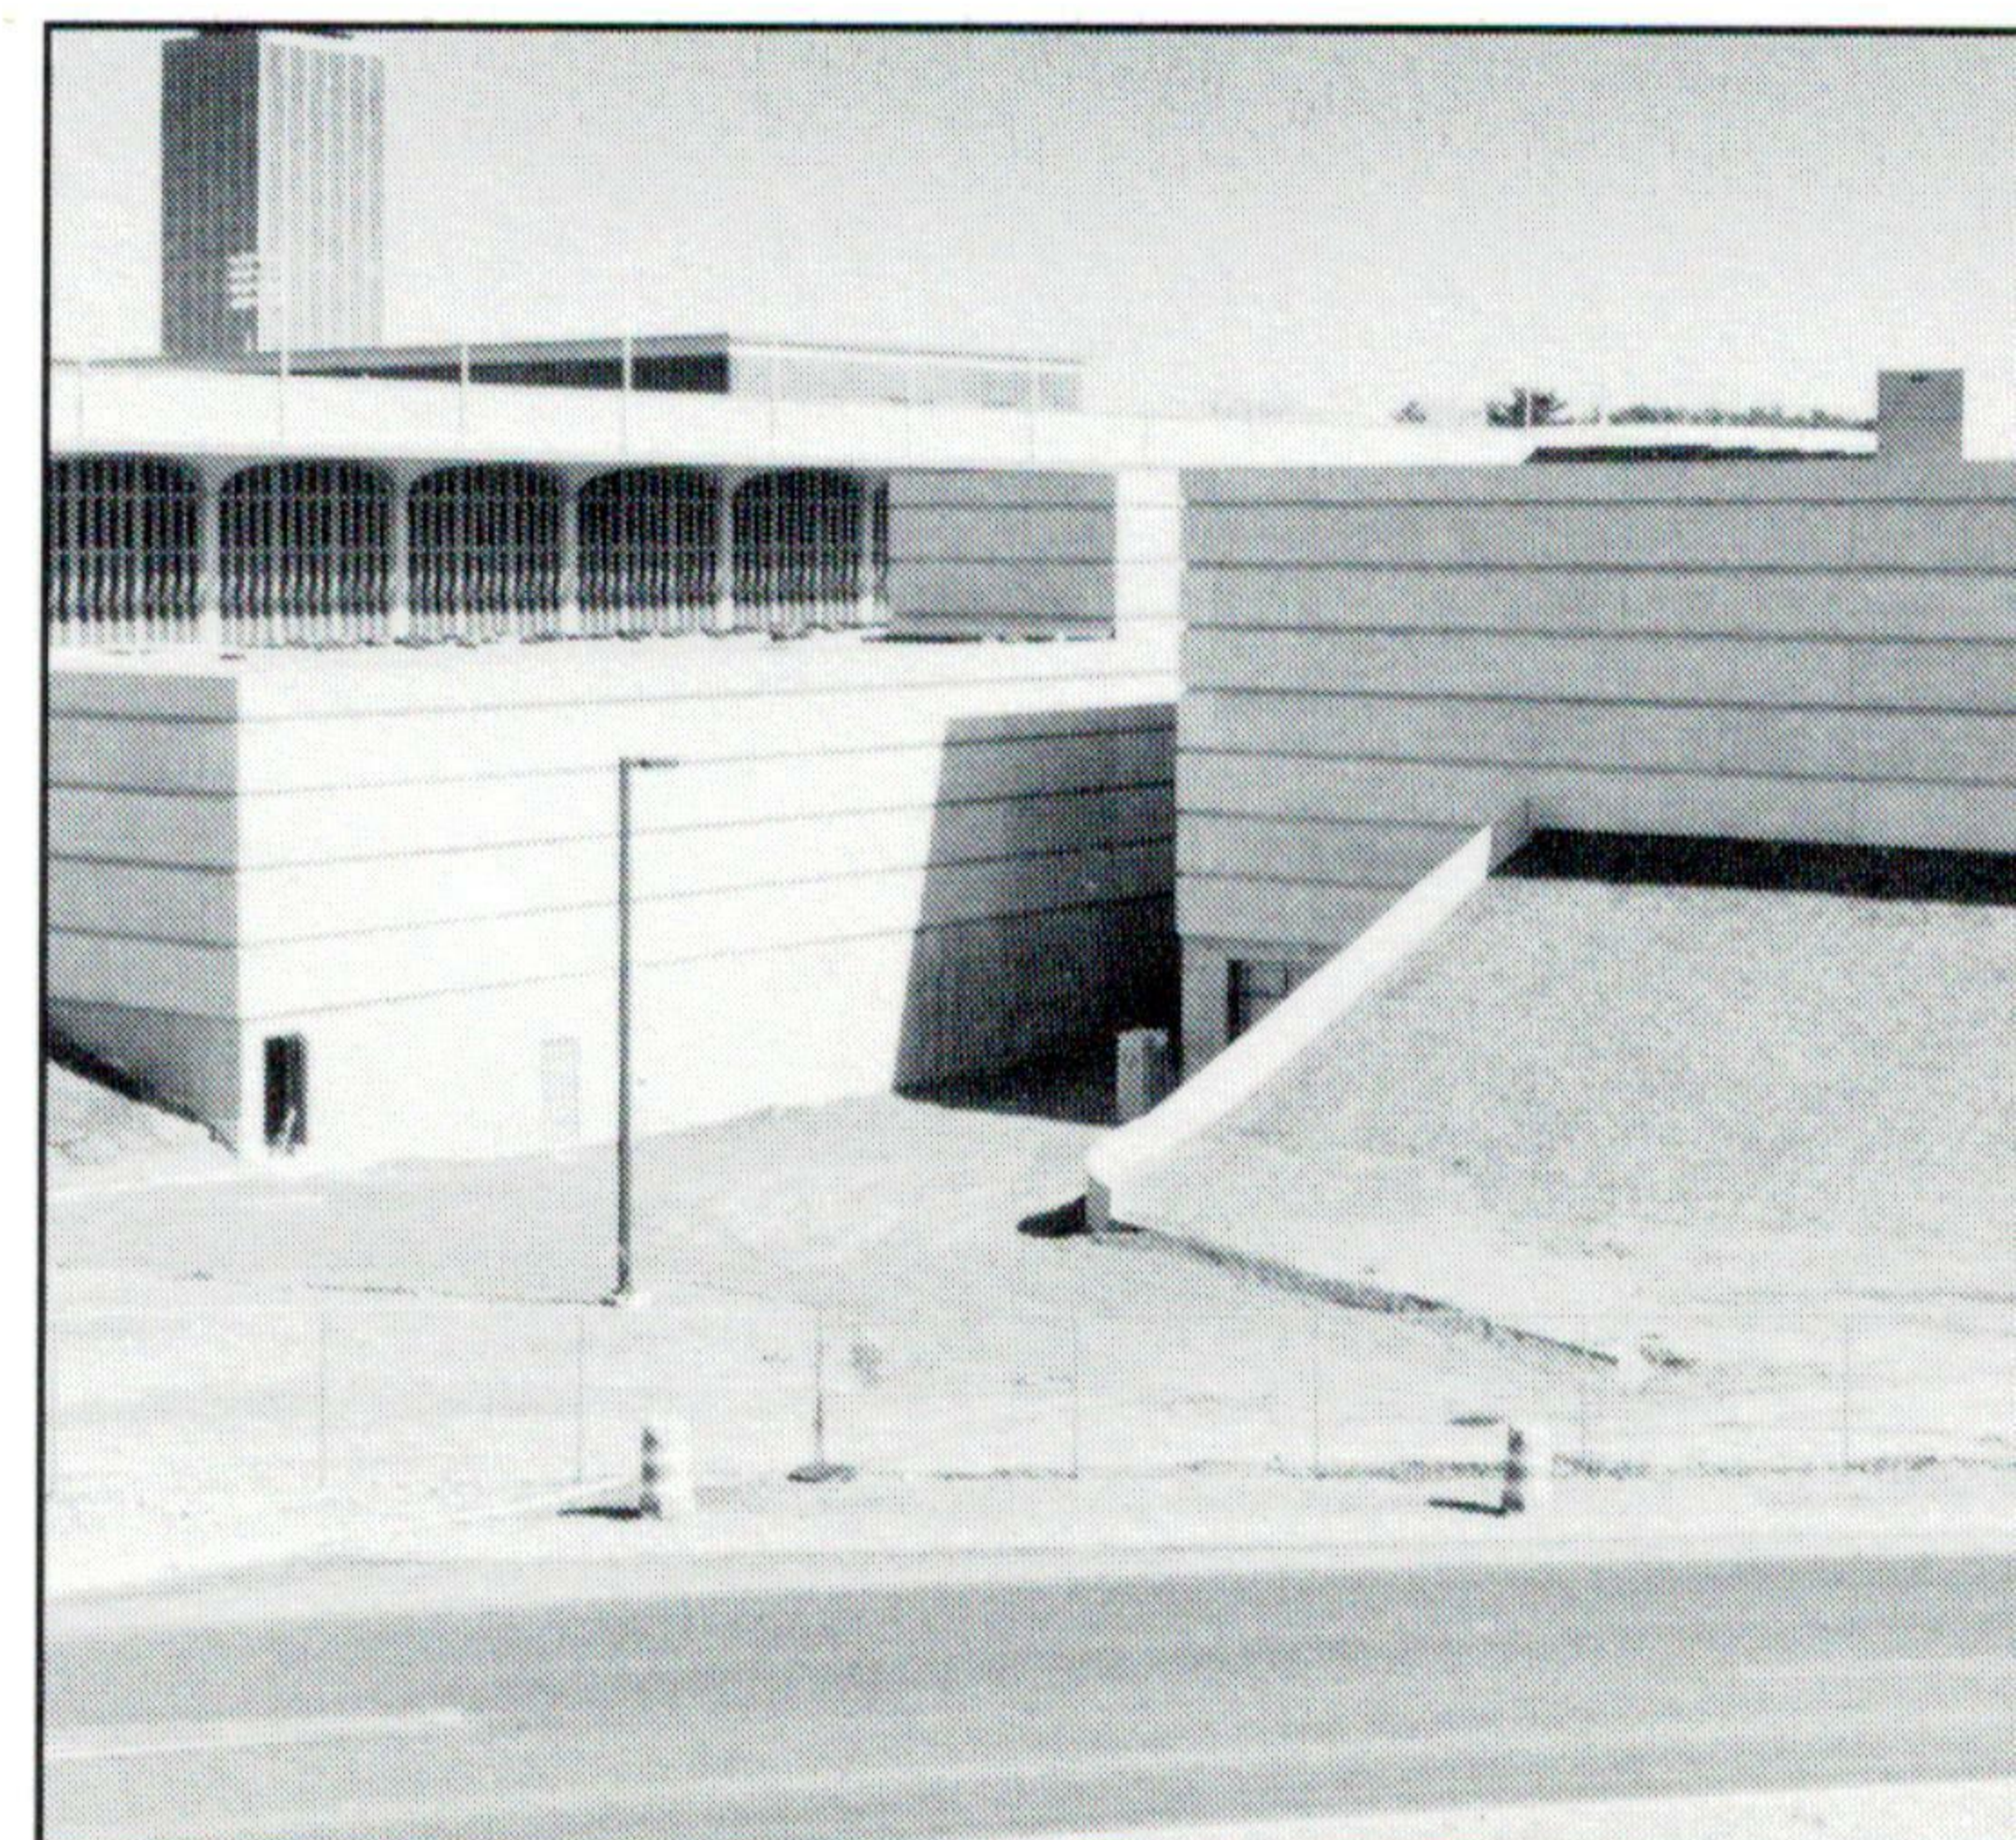

Special athletic training and rehabilitation facilities have been equipped with three whirlpool baths, a musculoskeletal evaluation device and other therapeutic machines. For the convenience of users, two general locker rooms and ten smaller team locker rooms have been provided.

The arena floor will be used for intercollegiate basketball and track and field. In addition to the main basketball court, there are two regulation playing courts. The track is a .11-mile layout, enhanced by long jump and pole vault areas. Concerts and other special events will also take place in the arena.

The University is very proud of its latest structural addition to the campus. Its opening will not only enhance the University's excellent Physical Education program, but will allow the entire University community increased fitness and recreational alternatives and access.

The Recreation and Convocation Center was designed by the Albany architectural firm of Mesick, Cohen and Waite and was constructed by U.W. Marx, general contractors.
