The Rude Awakening

"For I would see the sun rise Upon the glad New Year." — Tennyson

This incident might have occurred in one of the great wars which scarred the continent of Europe many centuries ago. A fierce battle was raging on a cold winter night. Hemingway, even his strongest critic tertwined with this story of violence, Snarling men clashed with each other, while is forced to admit that he can write treachery, fighting, and plotting is the dead and wounded lay helpless on the cold snow beneath them.

Suddenly, above the hue and cry of warfare, the past. It remained for his latest "For Whom the Bell Tolls." In it a great light appeared in the East, and a novel, "For Whom the Bell Tolls," to Hemingway has achieved some of his mighty blast of trumpets resounded above the battlefield. Men glanced fearfully toward the East, stared at each other in amazement, and then hastily crossed themselves. As quickly as it appeared, the white light vanished, leaving the field in darkness in a book which makes the reader blood-curding in their realism. The ing the field in darkness.

A young man, who lay mortally wounded, gazing in wonder at the strange spectacle, turned in fear and clutched the garment of an old warrior standing nearby.

"Father, tell me," he cried, "What was that strange light we saw a moment past?"

The ancient passed a hand over his bleeding forehead and turned to answer.

"My son," he replied, "Fear not. The light we saw yonder was but God's way of telling us that the old year has ended. You see, when that a Loyalist attack is planned to may object to the book on moral be commended for its action. the Great Father surveys such a year as this, begin. full of strife and sorrow, He becomes angry with the fools He calls His children and warns us that another year of life is gone—but He consoles us by saying that we have still another chance to try again. That, my son, is the beauty of Life.'

This is perhaps a quaint way of introducing this editorial, but this brain is weary with the toil and strife of the past few weekslong nights pouring over skimpy notes for an "easy" course, last-minute reading, the library, review books, outlines, bull-sessions, heavy-lidded eyes on the clock ticking loudly: 4:00 A. M., and fervent vows to change one's way next semester. (Remember?)

Like the Chinese, whose New Year began recently, so the college student enters upon a new period with second semester. The Chinese, too, believe in settling their debts and promises by the last day of the year. Those who fail to do so, walk about the streets carrying red lanterns. The red lantern idea may be a little awkward for college students. but some evidence of their procastination and forgetfulness would be desirable. Better yet. all of us would do well to pay our debts, carry out our promises, and start "the new year" with a clean slate and an eye toward improvement.

Something To Chew On

by Laurer The Sword of Damocles -

The male element of the graduating class of 1941 s unique in that a greater portion of that group carry on their persons small white cards bearing, in many cases, the inscription, "1-D," indicating that those possessing such cards will be available for one year of service in the Army of the United States of America commencing July 1, 1941.

Since it is impossible for any one person to be in two places at the same time, it is evident that these men will be unable to accept teaching positions and still carry on the active duties of a private in the United States of America's first peacetime conscription army. some 115 State College men carry these white cards lthough not all of them are in the Class 1-Deferred group. However, for some time, the thought of being called by the local board for active

Class 1-D duty at any one of the numerous army camps that have mushroomed up throughout the country has kept these male students in the same state of emotions experienced by one Damocles some years ago.

The Student Employment Bureau, under the direction of Mr. Paul G. Bulger, cooperating with Dr. John M. Sayles, acting president of the college, by calling a meeting for Thursday afternoon and inviting all male embers of the student body affected by the draft law, has taken a step in the right direction by explainng the procedure the bureau intends to follow in aiding those members called for active service. The bureau has proposed to keep in close touch with the draftees throughout their year of service so that immediately after their discharge they may be recomnended for teaching positions in the schools of the State of New York. With this proposal, the bureau has provided the draftees with a steel helmet and sedative to ward off the blow should the sword of the aforenamed Damocles fall.

It I is long been felt that the conscription act would lead to discrimination against men and eventually would cause a decrease in the number of men engaged in the teaching profession. Such a situation, it is believed, is certainly not to the best interests of the teaching profession and would be a blow to the progressive steps in education taken in the last few years. The bureau, Endangered by its action, has provided to some extent in aiding these men whose teaching careers were hitherto endangered.

The second step lies with the principals and hiring poards of education. Clear-sighted, liberal minded man who constitute hiring boards have adopted a policy which is in harmony with the plans of the bureau Many of them have openly stated their intentions of hiring male teachers "as if the draft law had never been passed." Others, less interested in the progress of education, have taken the opposite attitude and have refused to hire men who carry draft numbers. The first policy shows a keen insightedness and a sincere desire to do the utmost to cooperate fully with the defense program of the United States of America. Such a policy shows a conscious effort on the part of the individuals involved to further the progress of education.
