One For The Money.

A week before vacation, three members of Student Association made a report on a conference. In our ed to find that Minerva has been games. The radio station, following yearly budget, we appropriate a substantial sum for conferences. Yet, the body of the assembly was not outstanding for its interest and attention

How important are conferences? We send people regularly, more or less taking for granted that the expense is justified.

Three things enter into the value of a conference. One is the actual conference, its planning, apality of the person who is sent. His tactfulness, friendliness and conscientiousness mean the difference between a valuable conference, and one ed out blushing to the roots of my four people worked on the scriptwhich is just "for fun." The third thing of importance is what Student Association expects of the people it sends to conferences. We should expect some sort of a detailed report on every conference, including those attended by members of separate organizations as well as those attended by delegates from Student Association directly. Efficiency Plus!!!

Last night there was a joint meeting of MAA and WAA; this was the second of a series of meetings in which both organizations plan to combine into one athletic association for economy and efficiency. Plans seem to be going along smoothly and a full report along with a new constitution will be presented to student council before long. First step in the right direction. It is about time the students here start reorganizing in order to meet the needs of the college. The present MAA and WAA systems were set up NOT to meet the needs of 1500 students . . .
